BOYS' HIGH TAKES TITLE.

Defeats Richmond Hill and Wins School Chess Championship.

By scoring both of the unfinished games in the match with Richmond Hill, played at the rooms of the Manhattan Chess Club yesterday, the chess team representing Boys' High School of Brooklyn finished first by half a point in the annual championship series of the High School Chess League of Greater New York. Boys' High thus becomes the title holder and earns the gold medals which go to the members of the winning team each year.

Boys' High needed both points in order to pass Commercial High of Brooklyn, the final total being 31½ for Boys' High and 31 for Commercial High of Brooklyn. Silver medals will be awarded to the Commercial players and bronze medals to those of De Witt Clinton, who finished in third place with a total of 30. Morris High and Townsend Harris Hall, each with 27½, shared the honors of fourth place.

Spring Drills for W. and J. Eleven.

WASHINGTON, Pa., Jan. 22.—Washington and Jefferson College will hold Spring football practice, it was learned here today. Graduate Manager of Athletics Murphy said that he considered it desirable that veteran players get some instruction from the new tutor before next Fall so as to accommodate themselves to his methods. The college at present is without a coach for its football team, but announcement is expected to be made soon of the new selection.

BRILLIANT SHOOTING OVER N. Y. A. C. TRAPS

High Scores Rule at Travers Island Shoot—Dr. Martin Wins Scratch Prize.

No more brilliant shooting has been witnessed in years than that seen at the Travers Island traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. A field of fifty-two gunners came to the firing line and they all returned the highest scores registered in years. The feature was the wonderfully close race for the high scratch prize between Dr. G. H. Martin and A. E. Ranney, who shot in the same squad. Each finished the regular shoot with a remarkable run of 99 out of a possible 100 targets. On the shoot-off the trophy went to Dr. Martin by a 25 to 23 score out of 25 targets.

Although Dr. Martin won the prize, Ranney made the best continuous run of the day.

KELSEY WINNER AT TRAPS.

New York Gunner Captures Another Handicap at Pinehurst.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., Jan. 22.—Frank A. Kelsey of East Aurora, N. Y., winner of yesterday's midwinter shooting handicap, established a new record today by winning also the consolation handicap, the last official event of the midwinter tournament. This is the first time that any one man has ever won two handicaps in the same tournament at Pinehurst.

Mr. Kelsey today broke 97 from the 19-yard line and led the field of ninety-one contestants by a margin of 2 targets. Kelsey's score for the five events in the consolation was 20, 19, 19, 20, 19.

The following broke 94 or better in the Consolation Handicap:

F. D. Kelsey, 19 yards, 97; George D. Baldwin, 22, 95; D. C. Rand, 21, 95; Edward L. Bartlett, 21, 95; Charles A. Bogert, 23, 94; Jacob Fries, 21, 94; N. C. Hoffman, 19, 94; A. E. Conley, 19, 94; W. F. Clarke, 94; John B. Lallance, 19, 94; L. W. Rockwell, 19, 94; Bob Smith, 17, 94.

GUENTHER LEADS GUNNERS.

Scores Double Victory at Nassau Traps at Mineola.

E. A. Guenther won both the weekly and the season shoot over the traps of the Nassau Trapshooting Club at Mineola, L. I., yesterday. In the first event, he took the trophy with a card of 44-6-50. In the shoot for the season prize, his score was 22-3-25. Although a slight rain fell, the conditions were satisfactory and the majority of the scores high.

DOTY WINS AT SHOOT.

Turns In High Score at Traps of Bayside Y. C.

C. W. Doty was high gun in the weekly shoot of the Bayside Yacht Club yesterday when he broke 69 of the 75 targets at which he aimed. Doty missed three in the first string of 25, one in the second and two in the third. Raynor Goodwin, Walter M. Collins and Captain Foster were tied for second with 67 each.

BETHLEHEM ELEVEN WINS.

Defeats Robins by 3 to 2 on Muddy Field.

Special to The New York Times.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Jan. 22.—The Bethlehem F. C. today defeated Robins Dry Docks in a National League game by the score of 3 goals to 2. The victory avenged the first defeat on the home grounds when, three weeks ago, the Robins eliminated Bethlehem in the American Cup 1 goal to 0.

Rain, starting early this morning, fell intermittently throughout the game and left the field soft and muddy. These conditions somewhat marred the footwork of the players.

The Robins, confident by their previous cup victory, were due for a rude awakening when in the first half Bethlehem counted twice and added the third and final goal in the opening minutes when play was resumed. However, the fast pace apparently was more effective on the Bethlehem players, for with less than twenty minutes more to play Robins counted their first goal, which was followed a short time later by another. The play of Bethlehem team was far superior to the form displayed in the previous meeting. The visiting backs experienced trouble in breaking up the combination of the forward line and were particularly kept busy in checking the speedy Brittan.

The most sensational play of the day was made by Renzulli. The visiting goalie stopped the drive of Brittan and then threw himself head foremost on the ball while Forrest came dashing in to complete the shot. Both Fleming and Brittan had shots at the goal in the early minutes of play. Bethlehem finally broke away and started down field. Morrison made a perfect pass to Brittan, who converted the kick into a goal after twenty-five minutes of play. The second goal was the result of a scrimmage at the very mouth of the visitors' net, which ended when Morrison scored.

The line-up:

ROBINS DRY DOCK.		BETHLEHEM F. C.
Renzulli	G.	Duncan
Brownlie	L. F. B.	Ferguson
Beardsworth	R. H. B.	Bethune
Clarke	C. H. B.	Campbell
Irvine	L. H. B.	Murray
Garside	O. R.	Morrison
McGuire	I. R.	Wilson
Sturch	C. F.	Brittan
Hoste	O. L.	Forrest
Sweeney	I. L.	Fleming

Goals—Brittan, Morrison, Forrest, McGuire, Sturch.

Referee—Young. Time of halves—Forty-five minutes.

Alex Smith Breaks Record On Belleair Heights Links

Special to The New York Times.

BELLEAIR HEIGHTS, Fla., Jan. 22.—Alex Smith, former open golf champion, broke the record of the No. 1 course here today when he got around in 68. He made but one mistake and this came on the third green, where he took three putts. The best previous score was 69, made by several professionals. McDonald Smith, brother of Alex, was the first to score under 70, and Alex was out in 35 today, with 33 coming back. He registered birdies on the tenth and thirteenth. The course is a par seventy, but very difficult.

GOLFERS NOT HELD TO STANDARD BALL

It Applies Chiefly to Championships, but Is Expected to Become Generally Popular.

Although the date on which the rule on the new standard ball will go into effect is May 1 of this year, still more than three months distant, speculation is rather strong among golfers as to just what it is going to mean. It is understood, of course, that the new standard will be 1.62 inches in diameter and 1.62 ounces (avoirdupois) in weight. This ball will be played in all championship tournaments. But what appears to puzzle the golfing public is whether that will be the only ball turned out by manufacturers or will they continue to make them of other specifications and the like.

Briefly it may be stated that there will continue to be an output of balls of other specifications. Mainly because there is a very persistent demand for them and also because the new rule does not prohibit their manufacture or use even in championship tournaments, for that matter. What the rule really prescribes is that for a ball weighing as much as 1.62 ounces, the minimum diameter must not be less than 1.62 inches.

This does not prevent the use of a ball of that diameter that weighs less. Neither does it prevent the use of a heavier ball, provided the diameter is larger. The real purpose of the rule is to prevent the use of the small, heavy ball, since its small mass with extra weight tends to extra momentum, when driven by a strong force, and was deemed to be throwing out of proportion thousands of golf holes in the country, thereby necessitating the additional expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars in alterations to keep pace with the development of balls.

Favored by Strong Players.

As a matter of fact, the use of the small, heavy ball was confined practically to the low handicap player, or at any rate to the husky, robust walloper, who could also scoop the small spheroid up from a close lie. On the other hand, thousands of players throughout the country prefer a larger, lighter ball, and will continue to play it undisturbed by the new ruling.

The attitude of ball manufacturers generally has not been announced to the golfing public. However, it is known that one of the largest manufacturers in the country will go in strongly for the production of the new standard article. This firm, by the way, makes one of the most popular, if indeed, not the most popular ball used in the United States, and its efforts will be directed largely toward retaining the patronage of the low handicap men with a ball meeting the new requirements.

There may be a ray of sunshine for the golfer in the situation which has developed from the enactment of the standard regulation. This has to do with a reduction in the price of balls already made up and in stock, which do not come within the new requirements. One prominent manufacturing company, stocked up with the small, heavy balls, expects to announce before many more weeks a reduction in price on these.

This reduction should meet with a hearty welcome from golfers. In these days of frenzied finance the cost of golf is ridiculously high, and anything that tends toward trimming the expense involved ought to prove popular. There is little reason to believe that the above stock will not find ready purchasers. Of course they cannot legally be used in tournament play, at least championship tournaments. But such play constitutes but a small percentage of the total of golf played in the country. For every round of tournament play there is, roughly speaking, at least twenty in friendly matches, and the saving represented in a reduced price on balls in such matches will be very considerable.

Experts Test New Ball.

Incidental to the new ball, a few experiments abroad of a somewhat interesting nature have been made. George Duncan, British open champion, and Abe Mitchell did a bit of experimenting with the standard ball a short time since. They tried several of the standard article along with others with which they had been accustomed to playing, and announced afterward that they got better distance with the new ball than they did with their old favorites.

Experts over here have yet to make any comparison, at least none have been reported. However, several well known professionals have expressed doubt as to whether or not introduction of the standard ball is going to make any appreciable difference in the game. They scout the idea that a player can make any adequate test, since it is next to a physical impossibility for a man to play ten or twenty shots and put the same amount of force and timing into any three or four of them. Until results are authentically settled by means of some mechanical device, the prevailing opinon here is that no appreciable difference between the new standard ball and the old one in most popular use will be observed.

TIGERS BEAT YALE IN HOCKEY MATCH

Triumph by 4 Goals to 2 in Thrilling Contest at Philadelphia.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 22.—After forty-five minutes of thrilling action, Princeton and Yale were deadlocked at two goals each in a fast intercollegiate ice hockey match at the Ice Palace tonight, but in the extra five-minute period the Tigers came through with a dash and aided by Knox's brilliant work scored two goals, and the final figures read Princeton 4, Yale 2.

When Haight scored the first goal of the game after twelve minutes of play, this one point looked like a large enough margin to decide the game. The second period ended with Princeton in front by 2 to 1. Yale lost no time in making the score two all. After two minutes of seething action, Bulkley, the former St. Paul school boy, did some daring work and personally registered the tieing goal. Knox was the first to get free and made a hurried shot into the Yale goal. Then, to make it a real victory, Knox proceeded to dash down the ice for another goal.

The line-up:

PRINCETON (4).		YALE (2).
Erhert	R. W.	L. Foster
Keyes	C.	Carson
Knox	L. W.	Bulkley

FORDHAM DEFEATS PENN.

Maroon Hockey Team Takes Measure of Quakers, 14 to 3.

Fordham University hockey players met the University of Pennsylvania team last night on the ice at the 181st Street Ice Palace and were not extended to defeat the Quakers by the score of 14 to 3.

The game was a speedy one from first to last, and the large number of penalties imposed upon the players of both sides indicates the hard-fought nature of the contest. The Fordham team is one of three Eastern teams that has not been defeated so far this year, the others being Boston College and Harvard, and the Bronx team will meet both of them next month in this city.

Fordham clearly outplayed Pennsylvania. Pringle proved to be the star of the Quaker sextet, while first honors on the local team were divided among McPherson, the Newmans and Stinson. Strong team play was the real feature of Fordham's performance, rather than individual star play.

The line-up:

FORDHAM (14).		U. of PENN. (3).
Walbridge	G.	Jeffries
McPherson	P.	Murray
J. Newman	C. P.	Kearns
McGuirk	L. W.	Diall
Stinson	R. W.	Cook
G. Newman	C.	Pringle

Goals—First period: J. Newman, 7:40; Duncan, 9:10; Cook, 9:20; Stinson, 14:01. Second period: Duncan, 0:30; G. Newman, 1:40; G. Newman, 4:30; McPherson, 7:06; Pringle, 7:19; Kennedy, 9:38; Murray, 9:45; McPherson, 13:02. Third period: McPherson, 2:15; G. Newman, 6:30; J. Newman, 12:32; Stinson, 14:02; Stinson, 14:50.

Substitutions—Fordham: Powers for Walbridge, Dimeon for McGuirk, Keresy for Stinson, McGuirk for Dimeon, Dimeon for McGuirk, McGuirk for Duncan; Pennsylvania: Riley for Cook, Fortier for Diall, Cook for Fortier, Diall for Riley, Smith for Kearns.

Referees—Tom Howard and Tom Lynch. Goal umpires—Dagerey and Walker.

HARVARD WINS ON ICE.

Crimson Trounces Dartmouth in Hockey Match, 5 Goals to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—Dartmouth did not have a chance at hockey against the Harvard Varsity tonight at the Arena. The Hanover team was beaten 5 to 0. Harvard counted in each of the first two periods, and played a great game throughout the match. Dartmouth played a very loose game.

Harvard got two goals very early in the first quarter, during which Dartmouth was held continually on the defensive. In less than four minutes of play Owen broke loose along the side boards and got away a long line shot, sending the puck past Neidlinger. Bigelow of Harvard got another goal less than two minutes after this, picking the disk out of a scrimmage near Dartmouth's net for the winning shot.

Two more goals were made by Harvard in the second period, both of them on short shots from close scrimmages. Bigelow made the first from the side, and Emmons counted ten seconds later. Harvard used a substitute line-up for the balance of the period.

In the last period Buntin scored on a pass from Bigelow.

The line-up:

HARVARD (5).		DARTMOUTH (0).
Holmes	G.	Neidlinger
Humphrey	P.	Foster
Owen	C. P.	Dorney
Bacon	L. W.	Ross
Bigelow	R.	Sands
Buntin	C.	Rothschild
Emmons	R. W.	Perry

Goals—Buntin (2), Owen, Bigelow, Emmons.

Substitutions—Harvard: Snelling for Buntin, Buntin for Snelling, Angier for Bacon, Baker for Emmons, C. Stillman for Holmes, S. Stillman for Humphrey, La Rocque for Bigelow, Snelling for Buntin, Gratwick for Owen, Martin for Larocque, Bacon for Angier, Emmons for Baker, Bigelow for Martin, Owen for Gratwick, Humphrey for E. Stillman, Buntin for Snelling. Dartmouth: Calder for Foster.

Referees—Rocque and Clifford. Goal umpires—Edwards and La Rocca. Timers—Hendrie, Murphy and Carlton. Three periods of 15 minutes.

CLARK VICTOR WITH CUE.

Defeats Lemmert in Pocket Billiards Title Play—Concannon Wins.

Two games were played at Lawlor's Billiard Academy yesterday in the continuation of the United States professional pocket billiards championship tournament, and the first went to George Clark, who had no difficulty in defeating W. Lemmert, 125 to 17. Clark played a remarkable safety game, and when he finished shooting each time there was practically nothing for Lemmert to do but miss. Clark's high runs were 28 and 22.

The other game brought Joseph Concannon and Charles Grugan together and Concannon proved to be the winner by the score of 125 to 79. Concannon's high runs were 26 and 22, while Grugan's was 28. Both players were practically even up to 63 points and then Concannon forged ahead and won handily.

EDITH FARR, BRIDE OF WM. M. GEER JR.

Vicar Emeritus of St. Paul's Chapel Officiates at Son's Marriage in Grace Church.

MISS WARREN MARRIES

Wed to Shannon L. Meany in St. Thomas's—Will Foster, Illustrator, Marries Miss Audrey Marye.

The wedding of William Montague Geer Jr., a son of the Rev. Dr. William Montague Geer, Vicar Emeritus of St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish, and the late Katherine Throop Geer, and Miss Edith Jaffray Farr, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Farr of 14 West Tenth Street, was solemnized at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in Grace Church by the bridegroom's father, assisted by the rector, the Rev. C. L. Slattery.

The bride walked with her father and wore white satin veiled with point lace and a tulle veil. Her flowers were lilies of the valley and white orchids. Miss M. Evelyn Scott was the maid of honor in palest gray with a turquoise-colored sash and a black satin hat. The bridesmaids, in turquoise blue and satin hats with ostrich feathers, were the Misses Anne D. Farr, a cousin of the bride; Marian H. Farr and Elizabeth B. Bartow of Philadelphia, cousins of the bride; Miss Gertrude M. Geer, sister of the bridegroom; Margaret L. Strong and Philena B. Fine, daughter of Henry B. Fine, Dean of Princeton.

Meany—Warren.

Shannon Lord Meany, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward P. Meany of Alnwick Hall, Convent, N. J., and Miss Margaret R. Warren, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Elliot Warren, were married yesterday afternoon in St. Thomas's Church, the rector, the Rev. Dr. E. M. Stires, officiating.

The bride, who walked with her father, wore a white satin robe paneled in front with rose point lace. Rose point also veiled the train, the gown being embroidered in pearls and her veil was point lace and tulle. She wore a diamond necklace, a wedding gift, and carried white orchids. Her attendants wore gray lace frocks and gray lace hats with falls of the lace at one side and carried yellow orchids.

Foster—Marye.

Announcement was made yesterday of the wedding on Friday in Bayonne, N. J., of Will F. Foster, an illustrator, and Miss Audrey Marye, a daughter of John Marye of Sheridan Road, Chicago. The engagement was announced about a month ago, but the couple were married as privately as possible without announcing their plans. The ceremony took place in the Dutch Reformed Church at Bayonne, the Rev. Dr. Van Raalte officiating. Judge Lazarus and Mrs. Lazarus attended them.

Berg—Purdy.

The wedding of Miss Margaret Stryker Purdy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Martindale Purdy of Short Hills, N. J., to Henry Berg Jr. of this city took place at 8 o'clock last evening at Christ Church in Short Hills, the Rev. C. Malcolm Douglas officiating.

Towns—Ros.

The marriage of Miss Emelia Cecilia Ros, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Salvador E. Ros of 322 West Eightieth Street, and Edward Barbour Towns, a lawyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Towns of 101 West Eightieth Street, took place at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in All Angels' Church. The Rev. Dr. Duncan Hodge Browne, who was Chaplain in the 306th Infantry, with which unit Mr. Towns served as a Lieutenant, performed the ceremony, which was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents.

Pryor—Carson.

Miss Marion Elise Carson, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Frank M. Carson and Mrs. Carson, became the bride of Jacques Frazier Pryor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. Pryor of Field Point Park, Conn., at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the First Presbyterian Church, Greenwich, Conn., where her father was the pastor for nine years.

Hays—Green.

Miss Rena Victoria Green, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Weld Ware of Cambridge, Mass., and granddaughter of the late George J. Seabury of this city and David Ely Green of Llewellyn Park, N. J., was married at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Church of the Transfiguration to James McFadden Hays, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert A. Hays of Sewickley, Pa. Following the ceremony there was a reception at the Hotel Biltmore.

ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Francis Bochman of Philadelphia announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Esther Jean Bochman, to Lieutenant Edward Osgood Bogert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lawrence Bogert of 1,190 Madison Avenue, this city. Lieutenant Bogert is attached to the United States Marine Corps, American Legation Guard, Peking, China.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Lenk of Birmingham, Ala., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Natalie Marie Lenk, to Walter Cleveland Fried of this city. Miss Lenk is a graduate of the Ethical Culture School of New York. Mr. Fried graduated from Williams College, class of '12, and during the war he served as a mechanic in the Air Service.

Mr. and Mrs. William Anderson Keys of 375 Park Avenue have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Adelaide Keys, to George T. Metcalfe, son of the late J. G. Metcalfe and Mrs. Metcalfe of Morristown, N. J., and Louisville, Ky. Mr. Metcalfe was graduated from Yale, class of '15.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph I. Brandenburg of 307 West Ninety-eighth Street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Marguerite Brandenburg, to Robert W. Haff of this city. Mr. Haff, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Erastus E. Haff of Montague Terrace, Brooklyn, served during the war as a sergeant in the poison gas section of the Chemical Warfare Department.

Miss Lucy A. Benjamin Betrothed.

Mrs. William Wallace Benjamin of 440 Park Avenue and East Hampton, L. I., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Lucy Avery Benjamin, to Morgan Witter Rogers of Providence, R. I., a son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Irving Rogers.

Miss Benjamin is a graduate of Westover School and is a member of the Junior League. She will accompany her mother, who is sailing in a few weeks for Europe. The wedding will take place shortly after their return in the Autumn.

Dance for Miss Julia M. de Forest.

Mrs. Henry W. de Forest of 63 East Seventy-ninth Street gave a small dance last evening at the Colony Club for her daughter, Miss Julia M. de Forest. The guests were most of them débutantes of a year ago, as Miss de Forest came out last Winter. Among the guests were the Misses Florence and Evelyn Loew, Muriel Vanderbilt, Emily S. Hammond, Margaret Trimble, Ellen Randolph, Eunice James, and Constance Jennings.

Entertains for the Misses Meert.

Miss Virginie L. Meert was the hostess yesterday afternoon at a tea which she gave at the Plaza for her nieces, the Misses Virginie, Eloise and Constance Van Buren Meert, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick William Meert, who for the last ten years have made their home in Brussels, but who have recently returned to New York. Many of the old friends of the Meerts attended the tea.

SOCIAL NOTES

New York.

Mr. and Mrs. John Pierpont Morgan are making a cruise in the West Indies in their steam yacht, the Corsair. They embarked from Charleston, S. C., on Wednesday, accompanied by four guests. The first stop will be made at Nassau, the Bahamas. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan and their party made the trip from New York to Charleston in their private car, the Newport.

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Gerard of 1,015 Fifth Avenue will entertain at dinner on Tuesday evening, Feb. 1, before the Charity Ball at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Mrs. John Henry Hammond is giving a dinner tonight at her home, 9 East Ninety-first Street, for Vice President-elect and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and Governor and Mrs. Nathan L. Miller. Mrs. Hammond is President of the Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Association, and following the dinner Mr. Coolidge is to speak on "Theodore Roosevelt—Citizen," at the new Town Hall, West Forty-third Street.

Mrs. Charles Augustus Robertson of the Lucerne gave a surprise birthday dinner, followed by dancing, for Mr. Robertson, last night at the St. Regis.

Mrs. Belmont Tiffany of 158 East Sixty-second Street will entertain at dinner tomorrow evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Welford Leavitt are visiting in Washington, D. C., where they were entertained at dinner on Friday by Mrs. Davis Ireland.

Frederick M. Gould, who has been staying at Gedney Farm, is sailing the latter part of the month for Southern France, and plans to spend the remainder of the Winter on the Riviera.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Willcox of 108 East Eighty-second Street will entertain at dinner on Wednesday.

Mrs. Joseph P. Cotton will give a tea at her home, 405 Park Avenue, tomorrow, and Mrs. Henry Bischoff of 46 East Sixty-third Street will entertain on Tuesday afternoon, for Mrs. Charles S. Farnum, in connection with the work of the Serbian Child Welfare Association.

Governor and Mrs. Nathan L. Miller, who have come from Albany for the week-end, are staying at the St. Regis.

Miss Adelaide Rhinelander is to be the Chairman of a committee of ten young women who are to sell a souvenir of the Charity Ball on the night of the dance, and they will be entertained at supper by Mrs. Frank S. Witherbee.

Mrs. Benjamin Tilton and Mrs. George Legg have arranged a rummage sale, which is to be held all day Tuesday at 736 Lexington Avenue, for the benefit of the American Committee for Devastated France. Mrs. Charles Astor Bristed, Mrs. Bertram Goodhue and Mrs. G. Allen Peabody will be among those assisting at the sale.

Dances and Benefits.

The ninety-fifth annual reception and ball of the Old Guard Veteran Battalion will be held Friday night at the Commodore. General Bullard, commander of the Department of the East, will lead the grand march. Governor Miller is to present the veteran trophy to the Governors' Foot Guards of Connecticut, which they won last Summer at the Sea Girt (N. J.) rifle range.

A bal masque and carnival for the benefit of the East Side Clinic for Children will be held on Tuesday evening at the Astor.

The annual benefit for St. Joseph's Day Nursery will be held at the Longacre Theatre tomorrow evening.

The New York alumnae of Mount Holyoke College will give a ball at the Commodore on Wednesday evening for the benefit of the college endowment fund. Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, Miss Mary E. Woolley, Miss Katherine B. Davis, Mrs. J. F. Fitzpatrick and Miss Mary Louise Allen are among the patronesses.

Dancing will follow the annual meeting of the Federation for Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies, which is to be held at the Pennsylvania on the evening of Feb. 1. Mrs. Sidney G. Borg is Chairman of the meeting.

The annual concert and dance will be given tonight at the Central Opera House for the benefit of the Day Nursery, Daughters of Israel.

Miss Olyphant to Wed Tuesday.

The wedding of Miss Anne Morris Olyphant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Talbot Olyphant of 911 Park Avenue, and John de Peyster Douw of Annapolis, Md., will take place at 4:30 o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday, Jan. 25, in the chapel of St. Bartholomew's Church. The ceremony will be attended by only relatives and intimate friends of the couple.

2,000 SERVANT GIRLS WANT TO COME HERE

They Arrive in Switzerland From Neighboring Countries and Are Anxious to Emigrate.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERNE, Jan. 22.—Switzerland is now overwhelmed with young girls looking for situations as domestic servants. Owing to the low value of German, Austrian, French and Italian money and the high value of the Swiss franc young women from all Switzerland's neighboring countries have flocked into the country in search of work. They would have emigrated to the United States had they been able to afford the passage money. Many of them reached Switzerland on foot and are very glad to take positions at $8 a month.

The servants' registry office here declares there are registered 2,000 excellent domestics who would gladly emigrate to the United States if they could get their passages paid. It is impossible for these girls to get factory or shop employment because of the great and daily increasing unemployment. Moreover, the demand for maids is limited in Switzerland, for the hotels in the cities are almost empty and are discharging staffs rather than engaging people. Hotels able to accommodate 300 visitors have, perhaps, about twenty. Owing to the taxation of domestics in France and the probable taxation of them in Bavaria, still more girls are coming in.

Charitable institutions are contemplating appealing to United States citizens requiring domestics to make arrangements for sending 2,000 or more of these girls to America. The girls would undertake to remain at least one year in a position, and, if necessary, pay part of their passage money.

'Zaza' Nets French Hospital $10,000.

"Zaza," from Belasco's famous French play by Berton and Simon, was sung "aux Italiens," so to speak, in Leoncavallo's operatic version at the Metropolitan last night, at the annual benefit for New York's French Hospital. Miss Farrar, Messrs. Crimi and De Luca headed the cast and Mr. Moranzoni conducted. It was said the performance netted the hospital about $10,000.

"Lucia" was the Metropolitan's matinee opera yesterday, with Miss Garrison in the name part, assisted by Mme. Berat, Messrs. Gigli, Danise, Dua and Mardones. Mr. Papi conducted and there was a large subscription house.

Throng at Zimbalist's Recital.

Efrem Zimbalist at his second recital in Carnegie Hall yesterday enjoyed that last tribute, a packed house, that waited when the lights dropped after the matinee's close until the violinist added three encores. Mr. Zimbalist's mature style of late years gives pleasure to those who had admired his sound musicianly qualities in earlier seasons here. He introduced yesterday a "Pibroch" suit by Mackenzie, assisted by Emanuel Balaban at the piano, as well as "The Dream" by Dirk Foch and "Witches' Sabbath" by Rubin Goldmark, these two composers being present in the audience. There were also works of Reger, arrangements by David, Auer and Elman, and gypsy airs of Sarasate.

MUSIC NOTES.

Alexander Oumahsky of the Capitol, Amanda Brown of the Strand and Edoardo Albano of the Rialto will appear at De Witt Clinton High School, Manhattan, tonight, in a concert preliminary to this week's Motion Picture Musical Conference.

The Philharmonic's next Brooklyn concert takes place on Saturday, Jan. 29, at the Commercial High School.

James Knox and the Scottish Select Choir will give a Burns program on Friday at the Brooklyn Masonic Temple.

ALFRED I. DU PONT MARRIES JESSIE BALL

Powder Manufacturer's Wedding to Member of Old Virginia Family Is His Third.

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 22.—A wedding of wide interest was celebrated this morning in Los Angeles, when Alfred I. du Pont of the famous Du Pont-de Nemours Powder Company and whose fortune is estimated at many millions, claimed as bride Miss Jessie D. Ball of this city, a prominent member of the Colonial Dames, Daughters of the American Revolution and several other organizations. The Rev. Baker P. Lee performed the service at his home on Wilton Place in the presence of the bride's brothers, Edwin Ball and Thomas Ball, and Charles R. Rogers, an old friend of the family.

Mr. du Pont and his bride left at once for Santa Barbara, where they are to spend a few days before beginning a four months' tour of the country. They are to spend some time at Mr. du Pont's 2,000-acre home near Wilmington, Del., and later will return to Los Angeles.

Mrs. du Pont is a graduate of Witherville Seminary, Witherville, Va. For some time past she has made her home in Los Angeles, though for several months she was a guest of Mr. du Pont's family at De Mourz estate. Mr. du Pont arrived in Los Angeles a few weeks ago.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 22.—Little is known here of Miss Jessie D. Ball, who was married to Alfred I. du Pont in Los Angeles today. Members of the family say they do not know her. Alfred I. du Pont frequently visits California, but where he met Miss Ball they do not know.

Alfred I. du Pont is said to be the largest individual stockholder in the du Pont Company. His first wife was Miss Bessie Gardiner of Philadelphia, from whom he obtained a divorce in one of the Dakotas several years ago. His second wife was his cousin, Miss Alicia Bradford, a daughter of Federal Judge Edward A. Bradford of this city, who died more than a year ago.

Following his second marriage there was a family entanglement which eventually resulted in Alfred I. du Pont being ousted as a Director and Vice President of the powder company, and in a $58,000,000 suit in the control of the du Pont Powder Company, which was decided against Alfred I. du Pont and his friends. The feud also got into politics and Alfred I. du Pont defeated Colonel Henry A. du Pont in re-election as United States Senator. Recently there was a reconciliation between Alfred I. and Pierre S. du Pont and some of the others.

Alfred I. du Pont is a Vice President of the Delaware Trust Company, which has nine banks in Delaware. He lives on an immense estate near Wilmington in a house which, with its furnishings, cost several million dollars. He is a musician and a composer as well as being a practical powder maker and the inventor of a number of powder-making machines.

Plan to Aid China Famine Fund.

Mrs. Willard Straight, Mrs. Seymour L. Cromwell, Mrs. Frank Vanderlip and Mrs. Simon Flexner are sponsors for a luncheon to be held on Wednesday at the Biltmore, when 100 women will entertain five guests each. Prominent speakers are to speak on China, and a permanent committee of New York women will also be named from among those present to co-operate with the American Committee of the China Famine Fund, which was appointed by President Wilson, and of which Thomas Lamont is Chairman.

Sister Marie Rosalie Dies in Car.

Sister Marie Rosalie of the Order of St. Dominic, Mother Superior of the mission at 220 East Forty-ninth Street, died suddenly yesterday while riding in a First Avenue surface car near Eighteenth Street. Her body was removed to the Church of St. Boniface in East Forty-seventh Street, where services will be held Tuesday morning. She was 60 years old, and had been a member of the order for forty years, part of that time its Treasurer. She is survived by a brother, the Rev. Luther E. Sanders of St. Leonard's Roman Catholic Church in Brooklyn, and a sister, Sister Mary of the Dominican Sisters.

Jared Barhite.

Jared Barhite, a retired school teacher, formerly principal of the Tihrd Ward School in Long Island City, died yesterday in St. John's Hospital, Long Island City, of hardening of the arteries after an illness of nine months, at the age of 80. He was descended from the Barhites who came to this country in 1652, his grandfather having fought in the Revolution and helped build the fort at West Point. He was a member of the Committee of Forty whose agitation for a bridge from Manhattan to Queens led to the erection of the Queensboro Bridge. His son, William E. Barhite, is a teacher in the Brooklyn schools.

Mrs. Cora L. Stanfield.

Mrs. Cora Leopold Stanfield, wife of Theodore Stanfield of 126 West Seventy-fourth Street, died yesterday morning in the Nursery and Children's Hospital after a brief illness. Mrs. Stanfield, since her graduation from Teachers College in 1902, had been a leader in the work of the New York Kindergarten Association and the Children's Charitable Union. She had herself taught for several years in the kindergartens of the city schools and had urged the founding of a children's theatre where classics suitable for young audiences could be performed. She was born in Chicago in 1881.

Obituary Notes.

BANKERS TO COMBAT CREDIT DISHONORING

American Association Names Committee to Co-operate on Clarifying Terms of Contracts.

FAVOR McFADDEN VIEWS

Would Drop Controller's Office—Oppose Discount Rate Cut and Tie-Up of Rail Funds.

At the first meeting of the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association many topics affecting, both directly and indirectly, banking and finance were discussed, and in several instances sub-committees were appointed to make an exhaustive examination of economic subjects and report at the next meeting of the commission. "Blue sky" legislation, taxation, the funding of Government loans, savings departments in national banks, the cancellation of orders and other subjects were considered.

The problem of the wave of cancellation of orders and attempts not to honor confirmed credits granted by banks was fully discussed. The commission was unreserved in its condemnation of the vicious practices that have recently been indulged in by business men, both here and abroad, and by banks; and there was common accord that all possible steps should be taken to arrest a development which, if permitted to continue, would [illegible] tend to undermine the confidence upon which business and banking must be based.

A special committee was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Traylor and Hecht, to co-operate with the Bankers Commercial Credit Committee, which, in co-operation with the American Acceptance Council, is at work clarifying and codifying the meaning of terms used in letters of credit, to establish, so far as possible, a common accord concerning the usage and meaning of these terms when used in contracts between banks and their customers.

The commission examined the McFadden amendment to the Federal Reserve act now before Congress and decided to endorse its general principles, with minor modifications, which at the proper time it will recommend to the Executive Council of the American Bankers Association. The commission unqualifiedly endorsed the main features of the amendment which are the abolishment of the office of the Controller of the Currency and the taking over by the Federal Reserve Board of the main functions exercised by that bureau of the Treasury Department; the power to be given to the board itself to elect the Governor of the board, who shall act also as Chairman of the board, thus changing the present system, which empowers the President to appoint or to demote the Governor and Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and which provides that the chairman of the board shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The McFadden amendment provides for the appointment of members of the board, each to serve for a term of seven years. The Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association favors the creation of the office of an Under-Secretary of the Treasury in the similar manner as the Under-Secretaryship has been created for the State Department, this Under-Secretary to be, as far as possible, a permanent officer of the Government serving without regard to the changes of parties, and an expert on the grave questions of taxation and Government finance, which will for a great many years to come require the most expert handling.

The discussion showed that there was unanimity on the following points:

That the time had not yet come for the Federal Reserve Board to consider the reduction of discount rates.

That the present tangle by which the sums due the railroads are tied up in the Treasury is a grave impediment in the banking situation, which indirectly affects seriously the entire business situation. Those present were:

Walter W. Head, President Omaha National Bank, Omaha; Evans Woollen, President Fletcher Savings and Trust Company, Indianapolis; M. A. Traylor, President First Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago; John W. Staley, President People's State Bank, Detroit; A. E. Adams, President Dollar Savings and Trust Company, Youngstown; George E. Roberts, Vice President National City Bank, New York; R. S. Hecht, President Hibernia Bank and Trust Company, New Orleans; Waldo Newcomer, President National Exchange Bank, Baltimore, and Paul M. Warburg (Chairman), New York City.

HOG ISLAND SENDS OUT ITS LAST SHIP

With Delivery of Army Transport Aisne This Week Building at Plant Will Cease.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 22.—Hog Island, once the world's greatest shipyard, today sent its last vessel, the army transport Aisne, on a trial run off the Delaware Capes, and with its delivery to the Emergency Fleet Corporation next Thursday shipbuilding at the big plant will cease. Early next month the American International Shipbuilding Corporation will turn the yard over to the United States Shipping Board.

Aboard the Aisne when she sailed down the Delaware were men prominent in business and governmental affairs in this city, Washington, New York and Boston, and several army officers. After being put through various official tests the vessel will return to the yard tomorrow, and five days later will be turned over to the Fleet Corporation. The Aisne is 448 feet long with a displacement of 13,400 tons. Her contract speed is 15 knots an hour.

Created as a war emergency, Hog Island at the peak of its operations employed more than 36,000 men and women. The first keel was laid at the yard Feb. 12, 1918, and since then 122 vessels of a total of 956,750 deadweight tons have been turned out. The production record reached its height in the one year period from April, 1919, to April, 1920, when seventy-nine steel cargo carriers were launched, an average of one ship every twenty-eight working hours.

RESERVES NOTES DROP $44,200,000

Federal Board Reports $289,600,000 Reduction in Circulation Since Dec. 23.

$10,300,000 GAIN IN GOLD

Total Earning Assets, $2,941,500,000, Show Decrease of $27,000,000 in the Week.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Further reduction, by $44,200,000, in Federal Reserve note circulation, accompanied by a gain of $10,300,000 in gold and $12,700,000 in total cash reserves, as against an increase of $33,000,000 in deposit liabilities, is indicated by the Federal Reserve Board's consolidated weekly bank statement, issued as at close of business on Jan. 21, 1921.

During the week the Government allotted over $310,000,000 of Treasury loan certificates. The effect of this operation is seen in an increase of $33,500,000 in the Reserve Bank holdings of discounted paper, largely paper secured by United States obligations. On the other hand, holdings of purchased bills show the unusually large decrease of $35,500,000, while those of Treasury certificates, following the redemption of the special certificates held by four Reserve Banks, show a falling off of about $25,000,000. In consequence of the changes just noted, total earning assets show a decrease of $27,600,000 and on Jan. 21 stood at $2,941,500,000.

Of the total holdings of $1,056,100,000 of paper secured by United States Government obligations, $615,700,000, or 58.3 per cent., were secured by Liberty and other United States bonds; $282,000,000, or 26.7 per cent., by Victory notes, and $158,300,000, or 15 per cent., by Treasury certificates as against $598,700,000, $297,800,000 and $128,100,000 reported the week before.

Discounted bills held by the Boston, Philadelphia and Cleveland banks are shown inclusive of $61,600,000 of bills discounted for five reserve banks in the South and Middle West, compared with $77,700,000 shown the week before, while the total of purchased bills held by the Boston and San Francisco banks is inclusive of $11,700,000 of bank acceptances purchased from the New York Reserve Bank.

Government deposits are shown $23,600,000 larger and reserve deposits, $8,900,000 larger than on the previous Friday, while other deposits, composed largely of cashiers' checks and non-member banks' clearing accounts, show a reduction for the week of $2,300,000. The "float," carried by the reserve banks and treated as a deduction from immediately available deposits, is shown $2,800,000 less than the week before. As a consequence, calculated net deposits show an increase for the week of about $32,000,000.

Federal Reserve note circulation shows a further reduction for the week of $44,200,000, as compared with a reduction of $110,500,000 for the previous week and a reduction of $5,700,000 for the corresponding week of last year. Since Dec. 23 of the past year there has been a decrease in Federal reserve note circulation of $289,600,000, compared with $219,400,000 during the corresponding period in 1919-1920. The last week also saw a decrease of $5,800,000 in Federal Reserve Bank note circulation.

As a result mainly of increases in capitalization of member banks in the Chicago and St. Louis districts, the paid-in capital of the reserve banks shows an increase of $147,000 for the week under review.

Individual Debits Up $516,000,000, Net, In Week, Smaller Cities Showing Decrease

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Aggregate debits to individual account, as reported for banks in 155 of the country's leading clearing house centres for the week ending Jan. 19, were $9,202,000,000, marking an increase of $516,000,000 over the total of $8,686,000,000 shown for the preceding week.

For New York City alone, the volume of debits is shown about $500,000,000 larger than the week before, while increases in some of the other centres, notably Boston, Chicago, Detroit and St. Louis, are largely offset by decreases reported for Cleveland, Los Angeles and other smaller cities.

As compared with the corresponding week a year earlier, debits for the week under review are smaller by $1,242,000,000, or about 12 per cent., reduced totals being shown for all the leading centres, except Cleveland, Pittsburgh and Los Angeles.

ART NOTES

The collection of Henry C. Lawrence, on view prior to its sale at the American Art Galleries, is one by which the public may profit in the highest degree. Not an object is included that does not speak eloquently of first importance of quality in art, and the collection as a whole has an integrity of aspect rare enough where objects of art are brought together in quantity.

The principal feature is the stained glass, much of which belongs to the thirteenth century, that in which William Morris thought any man naturally would choose to be born. But the thirteenth century man saw no such glass as these entrancing panels to which age has brought homogeneity and mellowness to enhance their original brilliant charm. The color now burns through an almost imperceptible veil of tone caused by the slight disintegration of the surface under the assault of centuries of weather, and makes to the imagination the subtle appeal of mystery.

It is glorious color, more intense and pure than any known to modern times, and a house that wears it, as a woman wears her jewels, should have it in just such pieces as these, small lozenges and medallions, a slender window, rectangular panels of a few square inches in area—and the textiles used in the house should be just the textiles of the present exhibition, strongly woven Gothic tapestries with their single plane, a primitive Coptic fragment, Genoese velvets with green and crimson as fiery as the hues of the glass. It is a collection that brings home to us the sad truth of the death of color in modern times, and one that, dispersed, should spread its inspiriting example to modern craftsmen, wherever any piece of it finds place.

Many of the glass panels are French in origin, and these are strongest and deepest in color and most refined in technique; but there is a robust virtue in the heavy leading of one or two German sixteenth century panels, and a couple of English panels of the thirteenth century are brusque and beautiful in the boldness of the design and, in one example, the vigorous grace of the scroll surrounding the central figure.

There are several examples of Flemish work, fine in execution, but declining toward the later ideal of pictorial design and sparse leading. A little Swiss glass of the sixteenth century shows the best characteristics of the stained and painted glass of that period.

A subject interest attaches to the thirteenth century series of French panels in which the story of the "Seven Sleepers of Ephesus" is told, and which formed the inspiration for A. Kingsley Porter's drama "The Seven who Slept." The designs are in the rude archaic tradition best suited to interpretation by this material, and their primitive directness has the tonic quality that evaporated from glass design as technique became elaborate.

The sixteenth century brasses form the largest section of the exhibition and are extremely interesting in character, most of them coming from Nuremberg, where the brass hammerers flourished for several centuries, following closely their first models in both technique and design, so that fixing one date or another to a special piece is difficult. The process as Mr. Townsend describes it in his catalogue is not elaborate. The disk is turned upon a lathe, and subsequently the decorative design is beaten from the back and driven into a brass or iron mold, giving sharpness and clearness to the surface. The bands of stamped ornaments were then impressed by the use of punches or dies applied to the face of the work. The designs are notable for their reticence and freedom from the florid detail by which much of the German repoussé work is marred.

The French and Flemish wood carvings also are distinguished among their kind and the furniture, nearly all of sixteenth century and of French or Italian origin, carries out the impression of a type of art in which the character of material is scrupulously observed, execution is carried as far as strength and appropriateness demand, design has breadth and dignity and restraint, and all things combined for the health of art.

Ancient Art at Anderson Galleries.

The collection now on view at the Anderson Galleries comprises a large number of objects, antique and Gothic sculptures, tapestries, rugs, paintings, ceramics, from China and Persia, Greece, Egypt and various European countries, all said to be the property of one man, culling from many sources, some of them famous, during a long period of years. In the preface R. M. Riefstahl reminds us of the great collectors of the past who accumulated on this vast scale. They largely have given place to specialists, and many of these will find it possible to augment their restricted collections with pieces from this or that section of the present group, which hardly could be expected to consist of masterpieces, but which contains much of beauty and charm and importance.

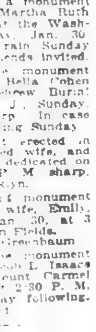
The antique marbles and vases come from various sources, among them the Hope collection, which sheltered masterpieces as well as much of secondary character; the Simonetti collection, that of Lord Swansea, and others equally well known. A handsome marble torso, warm in color, and firm to the point of hardness in modeling, comes from the Simonetti collection, and there is a small torso of a youth, much dilapidated but fine in conception, that arrests attention. A Roman ram and several figures of women are given to the Roman Imperial Period. Among the vases is a black figured patera with a bull-fight design, animated and vigorous.

The most ingratiating of the Gothic sculptures is a limestone statue of the Virgin, given to the fourteenth century, and possessing the gracious character of the French work. It comes from the Alphonse Kann collection.

The potteries of the Near East make an imposing group, with strong but muffled color and broadly sculptured forms. A salient piece is a massive vase decorated with a wide frieze of flying birds against a background of small leaves, which was exhibited at the Munich Exhibition of 1910. It belongs to the type of pottery found at Sultanabad, contemporary with or possibly a little later than that found at Rhages. The latter ware is represented by several bowls and sweetmeat dishes of great beauty of color and force of design, and this entire section is rich in opportunity for the discriminating public.

There are several handsome rugs, the most attractive a garden rug in which the design is the Persian weaver's interpretation of a formal Persian garden with its canals, ponds, shrubs and flower beds.

A Japanese painting of the seventeenth century represents "The Lord Tiger," a creature of glaring eyes and sweeping tail, bold and ferocious, very splendid in its concentrated movement. The Greek ikons include a "St. Michael and St. Gabriel" in Byzantine armor with a fine scrolled design in gold. There is jewelry, there are tiles, there is antique furniture, there is a little interesting glass, there are pictures and brocades, over 800 pieces in all, too numerous to discuss in detail, but claiming the careful attention of the connoisseur. The sale begins on the afternoon of Jan. 26 and continues until the 29th, inclusive.



CRUDE OIL PRICES CUT 25 TO 50 CENTS

Reduction of Runs Last Month Has Resulted in Congestion of Supplies.

PRODUCERS NEED CASH

Reduction in Pennsylvania Crude May Bring About Cut in Price of Gasoline.

As the result of the reduction of crude oil runs which became effective about the middle of last month there has been a congestion of supplies held by producers, and the necessity for some of these for cash has resulted in price reductions in some of the fields. Yesterday Pennsylvania crude oil was reduced 25 cents a barrel, from $5.75 to $5.50, the second reduction in a few weeks. Cabell crude oil has been reduced from $4.21 to $3.96, while Somerset light, Somerset, Ragland and McKinney have also been reduced 25 cents a barrel.

Some of the mid-continent field producers are reported to be offering crude oil at $3 a barrel, a reduction of 50 cents. In the trade it is the opinion that the cuts have come chiefly because some producers found that they had to sell to get cash, and could only find a market at the reduced rate, which would result in enough business to enable them to meet their requirements.

At the same time it is the feeling in some quarters that, while the local refiners have not announced a cut in the price for gasoline, the reduction in Pennsylvania crude yesterday may hasten such action, or at least may be taken as an indication of the fact a cut is not far away. The following figures give a comparison of prices for some of the crude oils in 1920 and today, which are interesting:

	Present Price.	High, 1920.	Jan. 1, 1920.
Pennsylvania	$5.50	$6.10	$3.00
Cabell	3.96	4.46	3.42
Ragland	2.00	2.80	1.75
Lima	3.73	3.73	2.98
Illinois	3.77	3.77	3.02
Mid-continent	3.50	3.50	2.75
Gulf Coast	2.00	3.00	1.50
Canada	4.13	4.13	3.38

Heavy shipments of Mexican oil into the United States are considered as one of the factors contributing to lower prices.

BRITAIN'S DEBT REDUCED.

Cut Down £247,000,000 During Year 1920.

Great Britain reduced her national debt by £247,000,000 in 1920. The British debt outstanding on Dec. 31 was £7,832,000,000 compared with a total debt of £8,079,000,000 at the close of 1919. Less than one-sixth of the British debt, or £1,163,500,000 is owed to foreign countries, principally to the United States.

Apart from whatever arrangements may result from the impending conferences between British Treasury representatives and the United States Government, Great Britain has no very heavy repayments of foreign debt maturing for several years to come. Detailed statistics received by the Bankers Trust Company of New York, from its English Information service, disclose that in their present status, only about one-tenth of the total of Great Britain's foreign obligations is due to be repaid in the next five years.

Comparatively limited repayments, also, are due this year on the debt held at home. The detailed figures show, however, that more than £850,000,000 of the British home debt is due to be repaid in the four years succeeding 1921.

The maturing home debt comprises approximately £275,000,000 of exchequer bonds, and the balance is national war bonds. Of the maturing foreign debt £81,850,000 represents payments due the United States on Treasury bills, notes and for silver advances, and £29,568,000 is Canadian bank loans. The remainder is due to Japan, Sweden and Mauritius.

Output of Some Copper Mines.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—The Calumet & Hecla Mining Company produced in December 7,514,300 pounds of copper, which compares with November output of 7,820,763 pounds and October, 7,943,502.

The December output of Granby Consolidated was 2,665,013 pounds of copper, against 2,465,585 pounds in November and 1,544,446 pounds in December a year ago.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Pressure is low along the northern border from the Great Lakes eastward and over the Southwest, and it is high over a wide belt extending from Florida northwestward to Idaho. This pressure distribution has been attended by a continuation of mild temperature everywhere east of the Rocky Mountains and by relatively low temperature west of the Rocky Mountains.

There have been local rains within the last twenty-four hours in the Middle Atlantic States, the Ohio and upper Mississippi Valleys, the region of the Great Lakes, the Southern Plains States and Southern California. Fair weather was the rule everywhere.

In the Mid-Atlantic and New England States the weather will be unsettled, with probably local rains Sunday and fair weather Monday, with a continuation of moderate temperature.

In the South Atlantic and Eastern Gulf States, Tennessee, the Ohio Valley and the region of the Great Lakes the weathr will be generally fair Sunday and Monday. The temperature will be lower Sunday in the lower lake region, the Ohio Valley and Tennessee.

FORECAST TODAY AND MONDAY.

Northern New England—Unsettled Sunday. Monday fair.

Southern New England and Eastern New York—Unsettled, with probably rain Sunday. Monday fair, no change in temperature.

New Jersey—Cloudy Sunday, probably preceded by rain in morning. Monday fair, no change in temperature.

Western New York—Cloudy Sunday, cooler in western portion. Monday probably fair.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at 11 P. M., taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

3 A. M.	48	20	4 P. M.	48	28
6 A. M.	46	21	6 P. M.	43	27
9 A. M.	45	21	9 P. M.	44	28
12 M.	44	25	11 P. M.	44	28

This thermometer is 414 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 45; for the corresponding date last year it was 22; average on the corresponding date for the last thirty-three years, 30.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 45; at 8 P. M. it was 43. Maximum temperature, 48 degrees at 3 A. M.; minimum, 43 degrees at 1 P. M. Humidity, 71 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 86 per cent. at 8 P. M.

The barometer at 8 A. M. yesterday registered 30.14 inches; at 8 P. M. it stood at 30.01 inches.

JAPAN'S GRIEVANCE DEFINED BY MORRIS

They Object to Being Singled Out Among All Aliens in Deprivation of Rights.

NOT IMMIGRATION ISSUE

Discriminatory Property Laws the Tender Point—Lamont Approves Consortium.

HE TELLS OF THE NEW CHINA

Banker Emphasizes Her Friendship for Americans, Founded on Return of Boxer Indemnity.

Questions that have arisen in the Far East were discussed yesterday at a luncheon at the University Club, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street. Japanese-American relations, especially in the light of developments on the Pacific Coast, were defined by Roland S. Morris, American Ambassador to Tokio, and Thomas W. Lamont, banker, spoke on "The New China."

No one can live for any length of time in the Far East," said Ambassador Morris, "and not be profoundly affected by the thought and spirit of Oriental life, which contains within it such a wealth of human experience and achievement. There is a maturity about Eastern thought, and a feeling of the past, which gives to the present a temporary and fleeting character, which contrasts strangely with the character of permanence which we attribute to our particular generation. Men of the Orient think in centuries, while we thing in decades. They see events in a larger perspective and are therefore less impatient in seeking results. They are tolerant of temporary setbacks, of momentary reactions."

Mr. Morris then went into the recent associations between East and West, and the nature of the American relations with Japan. He touched briefly on the international banking consortium, and alluded to the promise of help which it offered in the development of China. From this phase he went to the so-called Japanese issue in California, "not with the object of discussing its merits, but simply to define the question."

Naturalization Not an Issue.

"Japanese aliens," he said, "resident in the United States are not eligible to citizenship, our naturalization laws having been interpreted as applying only to white persons or persons of African descent. This is in a sense a discrimination, or, perhaps better, a selection of those whom for one reason or another we are willing to admit to the privilege of American citizenship. But it is clearly not a discrimination of a character which could properly be the subject of complaint by a Government whose nationals might be excluded. No Government would consider it proper or expedient to protest because its citizens were not permitted to expatriate themselves. A friendly State might regret and deplore such a policy, and even hope that some day it would be changed, but it would undoubtedly claim for itself and concede to other States the inherent right of a sovereign State to determine the conditions and limits of naturalization.

"May I ask you, therefore, to note carefully this point: The Japanese Government is not complaining because Japanese aliens resident in the United States are ineligible to American citizenship.

"Nor is the Government of Japan asking for its citizens resident among us any greater rights than those conceded to other aliens. It accepts and in its own domestic legislation has often acted upon the principle that any State has the right to impose reasonable restrictions upon the property rights of foreigners who chose to live or pursue their occupations within its borders.

"May I ask you, therefore, to note in the second place that the Government of Japan is not in any way questioning the right of our Government to pass, subject only to its treaty obligations, any legislation it may see fit covering the admission and residence of foreigners among us. It is true that by the treaty of 1911 Japanese were granted full rights of admission to and residence in our country. But this right was granted only upon the express understanding that the Japanese Government would continue voluntarily to limit emigration as provided in the so-called 'Gentlemen's Agreement' of 1908.

Immigration Not the Grievance.

"In the third place, therefore, may I ask you to note that the Japanese Government and people are not clamoring for the removal of any of the present restrictions on Japanese immigration? On the contrary, the Government has shown a willingness to examine and correct any of the defects and abuses of the existing arrangement.

"What, then, is this much talked of 'California issue'? Of what does Japan complain? Let me try to answer those questions. As I have already stated, Japanese aliens are ineligible to citizenship under the administrative interpretation of our naturalization laws. But personal and property rights they have shared equally with other aliens.

"In 1913, however, California devised the plan of classifying aliens on the basis of their eligibility to citizenship and then proceeded to deprive those who were ineligible of certain property rights previously enjoyed by all aliens. In 1920 this legislation was amplified by an initiative and referendum act. Other States are now seriously considering similar legislation, and the people of Japan are fearful lest this method may be used not only in property rights but also in personal rights.

Protest Against Discrimination.

"It is against this method that the Government and people of Japan are most vigorously and earnestly protesting. They contend that it is unjust and unfair to pick out a particular group of aliens who are under certain political disabilities and deprive them of rights which all other aliens are permitted to enjoy. And the Japanese protest presents to all our people this very definite question: In the larger view of our relations with the Orient is it wise thus to classify aliens on the basis of their eligibility to citizenship?

"It is not for me to answer this question. The answer must be made by the American people speaking through the recognized organs of their Government. But it is important that we should keep clearly before us just what the issue is so that we may more intelligently determine it in the light of the facts and arguments which are being submitted to us."

Mr. Lamont, in outlining the progress of the future China, spoke of the international consortium organized to relieve the country. He saw much good resulting from the consortium and compared it to "a little League of Nations," maintaining mutual understanding in Asia.

Mr. Lamont emphasized the friendship which China held for the Americans, a feeling founded on our return of the Boxer indemnity and fostered by American-educated Chinamen returning to their native land.

WEST SIDE SETTLERS HOLD CELEBRATION

Talk of Old Times and Present Canes to Officers at Eleventh Annual Dinner.

The old settlers of the west side, who get together for a dinner once a year and talk of the days when goats, squatter shanties and market gardens occupied the sites of today's apartment houses and residences, did something different at their eleventh annual dinner last week at the Hotel Majestic. It was the tenth birthday of the association, and evidently in recognition of the arduous work done by the officers in the past and as a prop to aid them in the next ten years, they all received stout canes. There was one exception. The retiring President, Warren C. Crane, who was unable to be present due to illness, received a silver loving cup. Mr. Crane was elected Honorary President and former Congressman William Harris Douglas was chosen President.

The presentation of the canes by Mr. Douglas provided the humorous feature of the evening. Most of the recipients promised to use them as an essential aid to the welfare of a genuine west side old settler. The association, it should be explained, is limited to 100 members, and the chief requisite for admittance is a residence in the district for at least twenty years. There are a few pioneers who say they have lived on the west side for more than forty years. Among those receiving the canes were the Historian, Christopher Morley, the Chaplain, the Rev. Dr. Henry E. Cobb; Secretary, A. Walker Otis, and the former Secretary, Arthur V. Lyall; Treasurer, Clarence O. Bigelow, and the former Treasurer, Alfred A. Spadone; Rush Tegarte, one of the Vice Presidents. Mr. Douglas, who has been First Vice President since the organization of the association, James G. Wentz and William H. Rockwood.

One of the original 100 members who comprised "Ye Olde Settlers Association" ten years ago forty-nine now remain. Among them are the first five organizers, Mr. Crane, Mr. Douglas, Mr. Taggiffo, Edward Moreland Cutler and James G. Wentz. Others of the original old guard include Major George Haven Putnam, who has been a speaker at every dinner; Dr. Cobb, Mr. Mott, Lieutenant Tegarte, Theodore Wentz, Henry and Alfred A. Spadone, Arthur V. Lyall, William M. Bennett, Walter L. McCorkle, the Rev. Dr. David James Burrell, Clarence O. Bigelow, Theodore R. De Vinne, former Congressman Jacob Vap Vechten Olcott, Frederick G. Hobbs, George L. Slawson, Scott Foster, Thomas Muir, A. Walker Otis, Robert C. Dorsett, Alexander M. Powell, Richard W. Davies, William E. D. Scott, William H. Kenyon, Duane S. Everson, John F. Sutphen, William R. Ware, Charles H. Paddock and Eckel M. Stiger.

There has always been a waiting list for membership in the association. To celebrate the tenth birthday, a book containing the portraits of nearly all the present and past members and a number of articles recording the historical changes of the west side residential area, was presented to the members.

MRS. SHERIDAN ON WAY HERE

English Sculptress, Who Made Busts of "Red" Leaders, Sails.

Mrs. Clare Sheridan, the English sculptress whose letters from Russia in THE NEW YORK TIMES caused great interest, sailed yesterday from Southampton on the Aquitania for New York, according to a cable message received by Lee Keedick, who will manage her lecture tour in the United States.

Mrs. Sheridan on her visit to Moscow met nearly all the "Red" leaders and made busts of a number of them, including Lenin and Trotzky. Notwithstanding this intimacy with the Bolshevist officials, she was told when she crossed the frontier back to civilization that she had been suspected of being a British spy.

Mrs. Sheridan is a first cousin of Winston Churchill, present Colonial Secretary. She is tall, with blue eyes and golden hair. Before the war she achieved success as a short story writer, besides being known as a painter and sculptress. During the war she served as a nurse at the front.

Among the many English celebrities who have posed for her since the armistice are Herbert H. Asquith, Winston Churchill, aFther Vaughn and William Marconi. Her late husband, Captain Wildred Sheridan of the British Army, who was killed early in the war, was a great-great grandson of Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

WILSON TO REPAIR HOME.

Will Spend $4,000 on His New Washington Residence.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—President Wilson plans to spend $4,000 in repairing the $150,000 home in the fashionable Sheridan Circle section which he purchased recently as his permanent residence after March 4.

A permit for this amount of repairs was issued today by the District of Columbia Government.

5,300 Suicides in Hungary Mark High Record for a Year

BUDAPEST, Jan. 20.—Thirty-two hundred women and 2,100 men committed suicide in Hungary during 1920, police reports for the year show. In addition, there were more than 10,000 unsuccessful attempts at suicide. The tremendous increase is causing much worry, inasmuch as the pre-war figures were from 50 to 60 suicides yearly. The situation is attributed to the gradual deterioration in living conditions and the fact that the war had the effect of making human life much cheaper.

Government, society and church circles, realizing the grave danger to the country, have begun a campaign against self-destruction. Sermons on the subject are being preached in all the churches and a special police force has been organized to keep strict watch and prevent suicides.

THE EGG IN TRANSIT; AN ECONOMIC EPIC

Eggs Come High, It Seems, Because So Many Are Broken in Getting to the Market.

AND IT IS NOT NECESSARY

American Railway Express Starts an Anti-Breakage Campaign, and Supt. James Tells Why.

In all big business this is an era of saving. Economy is the watchword in all the big corporations—economy in operation, machinery, labor, food and supplies of all kinds, but especially food. Now, take eggs—

In the office of H. M. James, Superintendent of Claims for the American Railway Express Company, is a portfolio full of most convincing-looking photographs of broken eggs. 'And there need not be any smashed eggs, or at any rate not half so many, according to Mr. James. So the express company has started an educational compaign for making egg travel safe.

Efforts are being made to reach the big egg shippers in different parts of the country, bringing home to them the needless loss in eggs, and trying to get them to comply with rules of packing and shipping which will avert unnecessary losses both to themselves and the express company. Another campaign among handlers, including all company employes, is also under way. Agricultural colleges and State institutions are co-operating, in an effort to bring forcibly before the public the fact that there is a tremendous and constant loss in eggs, much of it needless. The express company is advertising broadcast the fact that it will welcome suggestions for the packing and shipping of eggs. It wants new ideas for containers, already patented or otherwise, all of which ideas will be sifted and tried out.

Pending the discovery of the perfect egg container, eggs shipped in the case now in general use, the standard thirty-dozen affair familiar to every one, would stand a better chance if shippers would not neglect to insert the excelsior-filled pads which are supposed to be used. These "cushions," as they are called, theoretically go on the bottom of each egg case, and on the top, as well as under the top layer of eggs.

"We don't get a very large proportion of shippers to use the three cushions, however, although the cost would be but 6 cents to the case," said Mr. James. "They stand the loss—and the public pays more for its eggs."

"Honeycomb" Fillers.

Better than the egg cushions in some respects are the brown cardboard "honey-comb" fillers, five tiers in each side of the case, which hold three dozen eggs each, and the criss-cross sections which leave spaces two and a quarter inches high. These would be almost perfect, or at least better than anything else, according to Mr. James, if the faithful hen could be induced to lay eggs exactly to measure, or if shippers would ship eggs of exactly uniform size. But cases come through each egg two and a half inches in length, or even as long as two and seven-eighths. These bigger eggs are the ones that arrive broken. They project beyond the top of the filler and are pressed upon by the lid, or the plain sheet of cardboard which divides layer from layer. Therefore, they are bound to be broken. The small egg, too, which lies down tamely on its side in the little square compartment, hasn't a very good chance of surviving intact if the case gets much jarring en route. The strength of the egg, it is well known, is in the end, not the side, a very slight jar or shock serving to break an egg lying on its side.

The fault in the "honey-comb fillers" are soon weakened and softened by dampness, according to Mr. James. Thereafter they bend and the eggs may move back and forth and strike on the edge of the case or on the division cut, that the little projecting notched ends, called "tips," get bent. After that they hardly hold the eggs in position at all.

In the good old days before high prices, eggs were so cheap that nobody much was interested in the question of packing them, and any effort to improve packing and shipping methods met the response: "Too expensive." But now things are different, and, with 70 percent high cost of living the small boy calls "hen fruit," dealers are more interested in the matter of egg breakage.

Figures for egg breakage, according to claims passing through the office of the American Railway Express Company, are truly enormous. The Produce News of Jan. 15 set the amount at $100,000 monthly, practically all for the fourteen Eastern States, and mostly on shipments from the States of Pennsylvania and New York.

Eggs From Afar.

"Eggs are moving freely. Hens have laid well throughout the Winter so far on account of the open Winter and shipments have been heavy," said Mr. James the other day in discussing the new campaign. "Eggs come here from the South, the Southwest and the West. In addition to the general movement from near points. The proportion of breakage bears no relation to the distance. Perhaps in a journey from a point 100 miles away, the shipment is handled more times than a shipment coming from a distant point. The number of times a case is handled in express service will average higher, anyway, than in freight service.

"A great many eggs for the New York market come from California. Eggs are coming from China, too, and recently we have had eggs from Argentina. Now, out of one shipment of 6,000 cases from Argentina, last Fall, 2,000 cases were utterly worthless when received, through breakage. Yet a couple of weeks ago a lot of 4,000 cases came to New York from China, of which only an approximate six dozen showed breakage. The reason was that the Chinese shipment was more carefully packed and a specially constructed filler used."

"The method now in use, however, is not the proper one," said Mr. James. There should be an improved method of packing. The losses are tremendous in this very valuable food product. The best device, in my opinion, among those already patented and on the market is the cup-filler, where the ordinary cardboard flat is replaced by one with molded cupilike indentations. The thick molded pulpboard of this cup-filler system affords more protection to the egg, which is kept in an upright position in its compartment."

Professor Benjamin of the New York State Agricultural College at Ithaca has become interested in the fate of the egg in transit, and the claim department of the express company has been making test shipments with various kinds of packing, the professor receiving the shipments and making reports on the packing ideas embodied, from a scientific viewpoint, based on the condition of the shipment when received. An exhibit of various containers will be shown in the booth of the Bureau of Farms and Markets at Harrisburg, Pa., under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture. In the educational work with employes, representatives from the offices at San Francisco, St. Louis, Chicago, Atlanta and other points were convened here last week to discuss better handling.

Population of New York State Prisons Decreased in First Year of Prohibition

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 22.—The prison population in New York State on June 30, 1920, the close of the first year of prohibition, showed a decrease of 1,871 from the same day of the preceding year, it was shown by statistics compiled by the State Commission of Prisons made public today.

The report stated that on June 30 of last year there were 9,154 prisoners in State prisons, reformatories, penitentiaries, county jails and the New York City penal institutions. The year previous the number was 11,016. During the year the number of commitments to these institutions was 59,033, a decrease of 26,142 as compared with the preceding year.

The population of the various groups of institutions on the eve of prohibition was: State prisons, 3,879; reformatories for males, 962; reformatories for females, 394; penitentiaries, 393; county jails, 629; New York City institutions, 2,868.

Reports since June indicated that the number of prisoners in many of the institutions has been increasing "as is usual during periods of industrial depression."

QUOTES MOSAIC LAW TO ANNUL MARRIAGE

Husband, Suing, Says Wife Should Have Proposed to Deceased Husband's Brother.

REQUIREMENT FOR WIDOWS

Declares She Made False Statements—Justice Decides It Is a Case for a Jury.

One of the most unusual matrimonial actions ever filed here was disclosed through a decision in the Supreme Court yesterday by Justice Lydon upholding the complaint and directing a trial by jury of a suit by Jacob Friezner against Mrs. Caroline Friezner to annul a marriage ceremony under the orthodox Jewish practice because his wife brought about the marriage by making false statements.

The fraud alleged is that the wife represented that she had "observed, abided by, and gone through a certain Jewish orthodox religious practice which requires a widow who has never had children, and whose deceased husband has a brother surviving, to ask said brother of the deceased husband to marry her, and that if said brother is either unwilling or unable, the required ceremony is for the widow to remove his shoe with a certain ceremony."

Justice Lydon said that the ceremony referred to is no doubt that contained in the Book of Deuteronomy, Chapter 25, Sections 5 to 10, reading as follows:

"5. If brethren dwell together and one of them die and have no child the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger; her husband's brother shall go in unto her and take her to him to wife and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her. 6. And it shall be that the first born which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel. 7. And if the man like not to take his brother's wife, then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother. 8. Then the elders of his city shall call him and speak unto him, and if he stand to it and say, I like not to take her; 9. Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders and loose his shoe from off his foot and spit in his face and shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house. 10. And his name shall be called in Israel. The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.

Asserts There Were No Children.

The complaint alleged further that the defendant falsely and fraudulently represented that children were born to her as the result of her first marriage and that the children were living, which would not necessitate the religious ceremony above set forth. The plaintiff said that he is of the orthodox Jewish faith and that he would not have married the defendant had the facts been known to him because "she is in fact a widow who never had children as a result of her prior marriage."

When a complaint was served on Mrs. Friezner her attorney filed a demurrer contending that, although the allegations made in the complaint were true, no cause of action for the annulment of the marriage was stated, and the case came before Justice Lydon on the husband's application to overrule the demurrer and compel his wife to answer.

Justice Lydon refers to the ruling by the Appellate Division in the case of Fisk vs. Fisk, relating to the annulment of a marriage contract, in which the Court said:

"The contract of marriage is something more than a mere civil agreement between the parties, the existence of which affects only themselves. It is the basis of the family, and its dissolution, as well as its formation, is a matter of public policy in which the body of the community is deeply interested, and it is to be governed by other considerations than those which obtain with regard to an ordinary civil contract; * * * that the fraud which shall invalidate the contract must be something more than a mere representation as to collateral matters; * * * that no fraud will avoid a marriage which does not go to the very essence of the contract."

Says Jury Should Decide.

Justice Lydon said that in the case before him the plaintiff believes in the "principles and rituals of the orthodox faith of the Mosaic Laws," and the plaintiff "made particular inquiry of the defendant to make certain that they would be married according to the laws of Moses and Israel." The court said that the question is "not without difficulty," and added:

"I firmly believe that upon a motion of this kind the Court should not attempt to determine the seriousness of the fraud, or whether or not it is sufficient to warrant the decreeing of an annulment. The conservation of justice requires that this question must necessarily be determined by means of a trial, for only after hearing witnesses and the presentation of the case in its entirety can this fact best be judged."

TO REDUCE GUARDS BY HALF

Telephone in Each Car Makes It Possible for Operator to Call Stations.

The automatic device by which one man can operate all of the doors on a subway train was publicly tested Friday afternoon by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. A two-car train left the Court Street station at 2:30 with passengers consisting in part of a dozen newspaper men and several officials.

The guard stood at the centre door of the first car and by the use of a lever opened and closed all of the doors of the two cars without mishap. The train ran to Queens Borough and back.

It was explained that one guard could operate an eight-car train, the limit on the B. R. T. subway lines, as easily and safely as trains of fewer cars. Arriving at a station, the solitary guard called through a telephone the name of the station, and made the usual requests to passengers to "step lively." Each word was distinctly heard in both cars.

Asked what measures would be taken to prevent accidents during rush hours, J. F. Eagan, Superintendent of Transportation, replied that it might be necessary to have platform guards during the busy periods.

Train to Go in Service.

The train tried out will be put on the regular schedule on the Fourth Avenue line tomorrow, and as soon as others can be equipped with the device they will be added. The device has been perfected by John J. Sinclair, Assistant Superintendent of Equipment.

It was said that the company employs 2,200 guards on the subway trains at an average wage of $5 a day. No one on board the train could tell how many men the device would replace, but it was stated that the force of guards eventually would be reduced by at least 60 per cent.

The safety devices which prevent a starting signal from reaching the motorman until all doors are closed will be continued. This is worked by an arm that controls the signal system. The car doors are operated with just enough pressure to avoid accidents.

How the System Works.

"The most interesting feature of the train from the traveling public's point of view is the telephone," says a statement of the company. "Passengers who boarded the car which had no guard at the end door looked up in amazement when they heard a voice calling from what appeared to be a hole in the ceiling at each end of the car and advising them to 'watch your step.' The conductor is equipped with a telephone apparatus similar to the ordinary transmitter of the telephone, to which is attached a cord and plug similar to that used by a switchboard operator. The conductor inserts this plug into the telephone jack on the keyboard. When this plug is inserted in the jack, it connects up the telephone system throughout the train, and every word spoken into the transmitter by the conductor is amplified and reproduced through the receivers placed at each end of the ceiling of the cars.

"The multiple door equipment of the B. R. T. trains has several new features to safeguard the traveling public. All of the B. R. T. subway cars are equipped with an apparatus by which one guard controls all three pairs of doors at each side of the car. The new equipment enables one trainman to control all the doors in two or more cars, and with the telephone service, which enables one trainman to make announcements in several cars, it is possible to operate several cars with only one conductor."

FEAR A "CAGED VOLCANO."

North Carolina Citizens Say Flat Shoal Mountain Is Quaking.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., Jan. 22.—An investigation of Flat Shoal Mountain was demanded today by residents of Stokes County, this State. Dwellers in the vicinity charge that it has rumbled and growled at intervals for a year, wrecking their peace of mind. The sound was like distant blasting, they said, and evergreens and trees on the mountain were dying.

Fearing they might have a caged volcano to deal with, the citizens asked that Government earthquake sharps be sent to look into the disturbance.

DANES TO GET LOAN HERE.

Provincial Cities to Pay 8 Per Cent. for $15,000,000.

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 22.—Danish provincial municipalities have accepted a loan offered by the National City Company of New York amounting to $15,000,000.

The loan would be made at the rate of 93 and would bear 8 per cent. interest. The offer is subject to its acceptance by the municipality of Copenhagen.

SEEK LAW TO AVERT OIL PERIL IN HARBOR

Business and Insurance Men Unite to Put an End to Violation of Dumping Law.

TO PROTECT WATERFRONT

Congress Committee Has Cut Appropriation for Patrol Fleet—Menace of Fire.

Insurance and business men with interests on the waterfront have had several conferences recently to try to bring about Governmental action to lessen the fire hazard caused by the ever increasing pollution of the waters of New York Harbor by oil illegally discharged from oil-burning steamships and from industrial plants along the shore. Those participating in the conference will seek to bring about the enactment of a law by Congress to prevent the dumping of oil by ships within 100 miles of the coast and also to obtain an increased appropriation to enable Captain Roy W. Smith, Supervisor of New York Harbor, to bring about a more strict enforcement of the laws prohibiting pollution of the harbor than has been possible with the means at his command.

The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives has cut Captain Smith's estimate of the $1,198,000 needed by his office to $109,260, the amount appropriated last year. This it was said, would not be sufficient to maintain the present harbor patrol force of six steam tugs and a launch and would result in only two tugs being in permanent commission near Sandy Hook and one for inner harbor work. The appropriation recommended by the committee provides $14,260 for inspectors, deputy inspectors and office force and $95,000 for the maintenance of the fleet.

Captain Smith's Estimates.

Captain Smith asked an appropriation of $142,000 for salaries of the present office force, inspectors and crews of the vessels of the patrol fleet; $92,000 for urgent, long-needed repairs; $100,000 for repairs to the tug Barnegat, received from the navy to replace the patrol vessel Nimrod, condemned and ordered to be sold; $43,000 for the maintenance and crew of the Barnegat, $600,000 for the purchase of three tugs similar to the Barnegat, $130,000 for their crews, and $90,000 for fifty additional inspectors—a total of $1,188,000.

It had been Captain Smith's intention to use the increased force to bring about a strict observance of the law against dumping oil from the oil-burning steamships by a more rigid patrol and inspection system. At present it has been found almost impossible to bring about conviction because of the difficulty of obtaining evidence, as the steamships blow the waste oil from their tanks under water and it would be necessary to have an inspector on board to get proof of the violation.

Violations are also said to be frequent on the part of industrial plants on the shore. It was said that there has been only one conviction in the Federal courts for a violation, although many complaints have been made, and that was on the New Jersey shore.

Those at the last conference included P. Arthur Stewart of the New York City Board of Underwriters, Charles Fisher of the New Jersey Schedule Rating Office, Charles N. Rambo of the Railroad Insurance Association, James J. Hooey of the Continental Insurance Company, H. J. Wheeler and Andrew Peterson of the Wheeler Salvage Company, Captain E. W. Nichols of the United Contracting Association, George Earle of the New York and Cuba Dry Dock Association, E. H. Skinner of the S. L. Beadle Land Improvement Company, Frank Wilbur of the New York City Dock Department and George W. Booth and H. E. Newell, engineers of the National Board of Underwriters.

Federal Law to Be Asked.

It was decided at this conference to recommend the enactment of a Federal law to protect all harbors. Mr. Newell was directed to go to New Orleans to investigate the recent harbor fire there, which was reported to have been caused by oil on the surface of the water.

Mr. Stewart said that the hazard from oil pollution in New York Harbor was real and was increasing. Already, he said, several fires had started from this cause but it had fortunately been smothered in their incipiency. An effort will be made to interest owners of waterfront property generally in the movement. Dock Commissioner Hulbert has already called the attention of Mayor Hylan to the danger and suggested a conference to take steps to meet it through special preparation by Fire Department and by preventive methods.

In addition to the fire hazard, the oil has caused great damage to the beaches. Every Summer for the last two or three years there have been complaints from dwellers on the Long Island, Staten Island and New Jersey shores, and bathing on some of the beaches has been spoiled temporarily by heavy deposits of oil.

ABOLISHES PARDON BOARD.

Texas Governor Criticises Too Easy Granting of Clemency.

AUSTIN, Texas, Jan. 22.—Governor Pat M. Neff abolished today the State Board of Pardon Advisors and asked for the resignation of its members. In a letter to the board the Governor said that too free granting of pardons "weakens the law and makes of its enforcement a farce."

Until further notice was given, no application for a pardon would be considered, Governor Neff said, unless the Judge of the District Court from which the applicant was sentenced stated to him officially reasons why a pardon should be granted.

"The constantly growing tendency that makes easy the obtaining of pardons is one of the several things that are encouraging violations of the law," Governor Neff added.

The law vesting in the Governor the power to give pardons was a good one, he said, but its use should be kept sacred and inviolate.

IDLE IN MASSACHUSETTS.

One-Fourth of Organized Workers in State Unemployed.

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—Unemployment of more than one-fourth of the organized workers in Massachusetts was shown by a survey conducted by the State Department of Labor and Industries in December, it was announced today.

Labor unions reported that out of a total membership of 190,022, the number idle was 57,420. The percentage of unemployed was greatest in the boot and shoe industry, inactivity by 47.3 per cent. being shown, but conditions in this industry have improved in recent weeks.

Unemployment Here Checks Flow of Spanish Emigration

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—Unemployment in this country is having its effect on immigration. Ralph C. Busser, American Consul at Coruna, Spain, cabled the Department of Commerce today that emigration from Spain had practically ceased because of this condition.

Spanish officials, the message said, have caused statements to be published that, because of the unemployment situation, hundreds of Spaniards in this country are out of work and have applied for repatriation.

TO ASK JURY DUTY IN BEHALF OF WOMEN

State League of Voters Will Also Consider Program of Child Welfare at Albany.

Miss Kathryn Starbuck of Saratoga Springs will present a resolution recommending that women be made eligible for jury service in this State at the State conference of women voters and the annual convention of the New York State League of Women Voters to be held at Albany on Thursday and Friday. Miss Starbuck will offer this resolution in connection with her report on unification of laws concerning the civil status of women, by which it is hoped to remedy some of the inequalities between the sexes now existing under the law.

A discussion of child welfare will be a feature of the convention. Dr. S. Josephine Baker, Director of the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the New York City Health Department, will present a program of child welfare. Other speakers will be Miss Julia Lathrop, Chief of the Federal Children's Bureau; Dr. Edgar Rose of the State Department of Health and Dr. L. Emmett Holt of New York City.

"The New York State League of Women Voters is making a survey of the State to find out what is being done for children and what should be done in the future so that every child and every baby in the State can be given the fullest possible protection," said Dr. Baker yesterday. "The questions being studied are pre-natal care, maternity, birth registration, care of the infant, children of pre-school age, health of school children, and the sick, dependent and delinquent child, the defective child and the child in industry."

Herbert Hoover, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, President of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance, and Mrs. Walter Comley, President of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, will speak at a dinner at the Hotel Ten Eyck Thursday evening.

HAILS CANADA PAPERMAKERS

Drayton Praises Their Progress and Points to Duties.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Jan. 22.—Speaking at the annual dinner of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association here last night, Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, first paid tribute to Arthur Sifton, who died yesterday.

He congratulated the members of the association on the progress of forty-one small paper mills with a total wage bill of some $460,000 to a total in 1919 of 99 large mills with 26,765 men drawing wages of $32,323,000 a year, without counting men employed in industries dependent on the paper industry. Their exports of pulp and paper, mostly to the United States, amounted to over 10 per cent. of the exports from Canada, and were invaluable in their influence on exchange.

He referred to labor's dread of unemployment and said that depression talk resulted largely from men in the business, with large experience, not taking sufficient interest in the vast business of governing the country. He urged that it was their duty to see that every cent that ought to be collected by the Government was collected and that no basis of taxation was allowed which was likely to restrict Canadian production and enterprise. The Government had a right to expect from big business men patriotic assistance, he would say.

The Hon. Walter Mitchell, Provincial Treasurer, spoke of the paper industry as partners of the Government in development. He looked for a partnership beneficial to both sides.

He suggested three remedies for the ills of inflated currency, high prices and low production. The first was economy by Governments, Federal, provincial and municipal, corporations and individuals. The second was work, and the third was co-operation between all elements. He went on:

"We must work and economize from one end of the country to the other till the depleted world is replenished."

SEEK STRIKE FUND AID.

Idle Leather Workers in Peabody, Mass., Appeal to Court.

SALEM, Mass., Jan. 22.—Leather workers of Peabody who are idle on account of a strike filed suit today in the Superior Court in an attempt to obtain union assistance in the emergency.

Frederick Alexander and other members of the Peabody branch of the United International Leather Workers' Union of America, who brought the suit, complained that there had been no distribution of a fund of more than $10,000 subscribed for assistance, in the event of a strike, to all members thrown out of work.

The petitioners, who are not strikers but were laid off as a result of a strike, ask for compensation from the fund for the period of their enforced idleness.

PLANE TAXYING TO PANAMA.

Damaged NC-6 Reaches San Juan del Sur, "All Well."

SAN JUAN DEL SUR, Nicaragua, Jan. 21.—United States seaplane NC-6, which was damaged and forced to land during last Saturday's hurricane while participating in the flight from San Diego to the Canal Zone, is taxying to Panama, by way of Nicoya, from Gigante, north of here, where she was beached. She is accompanied by the tug Gannet.

The NC-6 entered port here for a few moments this afternoon on her southward journey. She reported all well.

TO TEST I. C. C. RATE POWER.

Supreme Court Gets Wisconsin Case Involving Intrastate Issue.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—A test case, involving authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to supervise railroad rates within a State as well as between States, reached the Supreme Court today from Wisconsin.

Counsel for the State Railroad Commission filed an appeal from an injunction granted to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad which would restrain the State Commission from interfering with the filing of new tariff schedules authorized by the Federal Commission. Advancement of argument to expedite a final decision will be asked.

KAHN LAYS OUR ILLS TO UNWISE TAXING

Present System Has Passed Beyond Economic Limit, Says Banker,

BLUNDERS HIT THE POOR

Sales Tax on Commodities, Exempting Financial Dealings, Recommended.

PROF. ADAMS DISAGREES

Fears Danger of Provoking Class Warfare by Imposing Sales Tax.

In a discussion of taxation problems at the National Republican Club yesterday Dr. Thomas Sewall Adams, Professor of Political Economy at Yale University, and Chairman of the Advisory Tax Board of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, said danger of provoking class warfare lurked in the proposed sales tax.

The whole tendency of the sales tax would be to favor large combinations which control products from the raw material to the finished article, and would inevitably tend to increase the size of existing combinations and to bring about new ones, said Dr. Adams. He asserted that the whole tendency of social and economic endeavor was against such a development.

"The larger the number of small independent business men, farmers, repair men, and other sturdy and independent contributors to material prosperity, the healthier must be the condition of our economic life," he said. "To reduce the numbers of these people, to bring about great combinations, would make terrific political problems. Such taxation in its results does tend to separate the classes, and it is going to be increasingly difficult in the coming years to prevent class warfare."

Dr. Adams also warned against a tendency which he discerns in the Republican legislators to add additional taxes to the burden already borne. He said that he felt as a lifelong Republican he had the right to protest against some things "to which a small faction of the Republican Party seems tending, to create unnecessary taxes."

"It has frequently happened," he said, "in the years I have been familiar with tax matters, that additional taxes have been created to make possible greater expenditures that would not otherwise have been made. There was never a greater need of public economy, and lack of it corrupts the public service."

Kahn Criticises Tax Laws.

Ill-conceived taxation has been responsible for many of the economic ills which beset the United States at the present time, Otto H. Kahn said. The exhaustion of cash resources which is felt so strongly at present in every line of business, he said, had had great effect in slowing up production and the normal processes of trade, and was largely due to "advanced taxation."

"Taken together with the action of various other elements influencing the situation," Mr. Kahn continued, "it became instrumental in causing an intolerable strain upon our financial resources, a scramble for funds, credit inflation, mounting costs, and finally forced liquidation and in sudden and violent shrinkage of financial, commercial and industrial values, including the products of agriculture.

"The thought and purpose underlying the fiscal policy inaugurated in 1917 was crudely to 'take it out of the rich.' And how has it worked? The rich, it is true, have been inconvenienced and handicapped, but far more inconvenienced and handicapped have been trade, industry and agriculture; and the greatest hardships from the resulting conditions have fallen unfortunately on those of small and moderate means. It is an old and sad truth that the effect of economic blundering by governments is always felt most by those least able to protect themselves."

The result of a three-year trial of the system of taxation begun in 1917, which at that time did seem to be in accord with the prevailing sentiment of the country, Mr. Kahn said, has been the high cost of living, with effects most troubling to "the plain people."

"One of the most unsettling consequences of our taxation system is the excessive and ill-regulated cash drain which it creates, away from its normal channels into the coffers of the Government," he said. "Taxes must be paid in cash. You cannot pay them in materials or merchandise or bills receivable or book assets. But while the outgo in taxes is all cash, the income of most businesses is cash only to a limited extent."

Profits Put Back Into Business.

Mr. Kahn said the practice in most concerns has always been to distribute only a part of the profits and to put the rest back into the business as additional working capital. Where little excess profit is left after taxes have been paid, it is necessary to infringe on working capital, liquid assets, or goes to the Government, and the inevitable result is lessened production and unemployment or intolerable strain upon the country's credit resources.

"There is an astonishing lot of hazy thinking on the subject of the uses of capital in the hands of its owners," said Mr. Kahn. "The rich man can only spend a relatively small sum of money unproductively or selfishly. The money that it is in his power to actually waste is exceedingly limited.

"Money in the hands of the individual is continually and feverishly on the search for opportunities, i. e., for creative and productive use. In the hands of the Government it is apt to lose a good deal of its fructifying energy and ceaseless striving and to sink instead into placid and somnolent repose."

A small normal tax and high surtaxes are a strong stimulant to wastefulness on the part of executive heads of Government departments, Mr. Kahn said, because it tends to lessen their qualms on being held to account by the people.

"It is all too invitingly easy to meet rising expenditures by giving the surtax screw another twist of a few per cent.," he said, "or to maintain an exorbitant level of expenditures in normal times by leaving the surtaxes at rates which were meant to cover the needs of an extraordinary emergency."

Mr. Kahn recommended that when business men sponsor methods of taxation they do not give ground for the impression that they are unduly concerned with conserving their own interests.

"I am not moralising," he said. "I am speaking as a practical man from the point of view of what I believe to be the intelligent self-interest of business. When our spokesmen come forward and claim to be heard and heeded

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, JAN. 23, 1921.

GERMANY, 1871-1921.

In the week just ended occurred the semi-centenary of the founding of the German Empire. If seven years ago one had been asked to look ahead to that event, it would have been predicted that it would be celebrated with such triumphant jubilations as the world has rarely seen. The German dynasty, Government and people could have been counted on to do something colossal on an anniversary which could so truly be called golden; and from every nation in the world would have come congratulations representing either the expression of honest friendship or the unwilling tribute of fear.

But last Tuesday saw no expressions of friendship coming in from foreign peoples. It found a Germany universally regarded with resentment and suspicion, and so weak that its ill-will to the world, though everywhere taken for granted, aroused no particular apprehension. The dynasty glorified in 1871 was in exile, the military caste which had glorified it was in at least temporary eclipse. Such commemoration of the day as openly took place in Germany was regarded by large factions of the German people as little better than a treasonable demonstration against the existing Government, and the memory of 1871 was equally bitter among those who saw in that great day a splendor such as Germany might never attain again, and in circles where it was regarded as the beginning of the march to destruction. In all history there can hardly be found so complete a peripety as the story of the rise and fall of the German Empire.

Deutschland über Alles was not a mere pious aspiration of the German chauvinist on Aug. 1, 1914; it represented, in most fields of human activity, an incontrovertible fact. The nation which was united in 1871 was pre-eminent in nothing but military and political strength. At that moment BISMARCK and the army seemed Germany's only qualifications for the attainment of material greatness. The German mind, to be sure, was known, and on the whole favorably known, abroad; but it was not regarded as the sort of mind adapted to great practical accomplishments. Germany was the land of great musicians, of pleasantly sentimental lyric poets, of profound but foggy philosophers, of universities where pure science and destructive criticism had been developed to a degree that amazed and sometimes rather startled the outer world, but where the best intellects seemed devoted to the worship of abstractions incomprehensible to the more practical intelligence of other nations. Germany was a poor country, a poorly developed country. The revolutionary efforts culminating in the few years following 1848 had shown an almost complete absence of political intelligence among the people, and, largely on the showing of the poets of the time, the Germans were supposed to be possessed of a gentle melancholy, a polite pessimism inclined to relieve itself by song or to drown its sorrows in the mild brews of the country.

To be sure, that was not the sort of nation that could strike down the greatest military Power in Europe and raise itself at once to a position of surpassing strength. But the men who had written sentimental poetry and sung melancholy songs were not the men who had made the new Germany. These were hard men—poor men, most of them; land-poor at any rate, agrarian aristocrats devoid of the amenities of aristocracy, impervious to the sentimental deliquescence so prevalent among the South Germans, and sincerely devoted to a narrow but intense ideal of military autocracy sanctified by religion and supported by the loyal devotion of a war-making nobility. The cavernous dimness of German philosophy was as foreign to the temper of most of these men as was the sentimental languor of German song, or the profound revolution in all music which was being made in their time by RICHARD WAGNER. The link between the old and the new Germany was German science, and a science which the military men were the first to apply to practical ends. What NAPOLEON did by virtue of his genius, and NAPOLEON'S Marshals by his example and instruction, the German Generals of 1866 and 1870 did by virtue of painstaking and intelligent application, of thorough study of the fundamentals of their science and disciplined application of the principles of their art.

By this same process Germany advanced in the forty years following the unification of the empire to unforeseen triumphs in other fields. The qualities of industry, thrift, frugality inherent in the German people were not unknown; they had been exemplified abroad by the great numbers of Germans who had fled from political tyranny or been attracted by the opportunity of a fresh beginning in America. On that foundation the makers of the new Germany began to build with the scientific thoroughness that the military men had shown in previous decades. Their success was no less astounding. When the long period of peace and prosperity ended in 1914 Germany stood at the front of Western civilization. Industrially and commercially she seemed as strong as any of her rivals, and her progress was more rapid than that of any competitor. German business men were going all over the world, sometimes opening new markets, more often developing or attracting trade that others had opened up. German factories produced goods which German merchant ships carried everywhere. In the work of applying modern discoveries and inventions to the meeting of the material needs of the world the Germans were far in the lead. German industrial chemistry, to name the most obvious example, was as pre-eminent in 1914 as German military science. The profits of this astounding development had on the whole been wisely distributed. There were poor in Germany, and many of them; but their poverty was not destitution, and a fatherly Government had seen that their immediate wants were met and that they had little opportunity to develop new cravings. Germany in 1914 was a happy country. There were complaints about the taxes; there was a certain amount of restlessness at the overbearing manners of the military caste; but even this was tempered by the conviction that the military caste had made Germany great and that taxes were a useful investment for the preservation of that greatness.

And Germany had won not only the substance of success, but still more its show. Great as was her accomplishment, her reputation was still greater. The brilliant work of the German university had led the world to accept university products which were not brilliant but only German. In the business world occasionally and in the academic world almost universally an inferior article with the Made-in-Germany label was preferred to something better with a less widely advertised trade-mark. German efficiency, deserving of much respect, was respected in 1914 even more widely than it deserved; for the world did not realize just then that in certain fields it had not been operative.

The Germany of material wealth and power was a great success—such a success as no other nation had attained in a like space of time in all history. What was left of the old Germany? German music still held first place, though by 1914 it was living chiefly on the accumulated merit of the past. German philosophy, for a long time pre-eminent, was only slowly losing its primacy. The poets who in the early decades of the nineteenth century had written sad but graceful songs had vanished; their descendants had either gone in for something more profitable or slipped down from ineffectuality to decadence. Something of the same sort had happened to the German liberalism which had flourished between Leipzig and Sadowa; its devotees had gone over to the new and triumphant cult or had fallen back to the political-religious Socialist movement. Yet in most of the fields which Germany had cultivated so profitably in the days of her political backwardness triumphant Germany was still honorably eminent, and the prestige of her more material achievements operated strongly to maintain a reputation in other fields which if left to itself might have been appreciably dimmed.

Germany's greatness in 1914 was undeniable, it was well founded, and it was not begrudged by her neighbors. In only one field was it a sham greatness, insecurely based, and that was the field where BISMARCK and MOLTKE had shone so brilliantly years before. The German Army was still the greatest in the world, still the most highly rated by all military students; and when it came to the test it did indeed perform brilliant exploits for more than four years. But it failed to accomplish its purpose, and failed largely through inherent defects of its own system and its own leaders. Germany had an imposing position in international politics from 1871 to 1914, but for the last twenty years of that period she held it merely by possession of a formidable military power which she was constantly threatening to use. A nation which talks war on every occasion has a certain advantage over nations which do not care to think of war unless there is no possible alternative. While BISMARCK held office Germany's political predominance rested on his genius; when he was removed, German international policy had no recourses but the incessant shaking of the fist and rattling of the saber. Germany must have her own way, and let those who opposed her be prepared for the consequences. A day came when they concluded that it would be better to take the consequences than submit to this eternal bullying, and the Germany of 1921 is the result.

Germany was ruined in 1914 by the same dynasty, the same class and the same methods which magnified Germany in 1870. They were methods fundamentally bad, for they made friends into enemies, and even for material success they depended on the control of a genius. Perhaps the most important lesson of the war, for the German people at least, is that Bismarcks do not grow on bushes; and the corollary of that is that no nation should so conduct itself that it will presently need a Bismarck to save it from ruin. Today the nation which in 1914 was the strongest and on the whole the most contented in Europe lies in the hands of those whom she attacked without justification. Her territory is occupied by foreign troops, she is to be compelled to pay a huge indemnity for the wanton destruction which her armies did to her inoffensive neighbors. What is perhaps more serious still for the future of Germany, her industrial and commercial life is in chaos, and there is grave suspicion that this chaos has deliberately been intensified in the hope of evading her obligations. If a reduction of the indemnity could be bought in that way, the price would be far too high; for Germany might find that recovery too long delayed is impossible.

The ruin of Germany was brought about by her dynasty and her ruling class, but the German people stood by and were consenting. In an editorial article published in this paper on Dec. 15, 1914, it was declared that the German people could gain nothing by a successful issue of the war; that such an issue was in any case out of the question, for a world which had lived in friendship with a great and prosperous Germany would not permit Germany to destroy without excuse the greatness and prosperity of her neighbors. The German people were warned that if they continued to tolerate the dominance of the men who had made this needless and ruinous war they must pay for the damage they had done, and they were urged to throw off that dominance while there was yet time. To counsels of this sort the Germans remained deaf so long as they thought they would win the war. Disillusionment came only when the great war machine at last broke down; then indeed the Germans threw off the monarchist and aristocratic leadership that had ruined them, but they did it in the hope of escaping payment for the devastation that Germany had brought upon Europe.

Yet the republic has survived more than two years—survived against Bolshevist risings and against attempts to restore the old aristocratic rule. It is not yet secure; the men who made the victorious Germany of 1871, and who brought to ruin the great and prosperous Germany of 1914, are not converted from their ideals; to all appearance they never will be converted. They are still plotting, still waiting for the day when they can begin once more the old process of military conquest, and they still hope that in the future as in the past they can drag or drive a docile people with them. The world can tolerate their overlordship no more in the future than it could in the past. If they regain control of Germany, they can only lead the German people into still deeper abysses of misery. For the injury done under their guidance from 1914 to 1918 reparation must be made; that is the first and chief requirement laid on the German people. But unless that people has lost the qualities by which it rose to such heights in the latter part of the nineteenth century it will consider the causes of its downfall, it will realize that the world has no jealousy for a Germany that is willing to be a good neighbor, and it will resolve that the old Junker domination is ended as definitely as the rule of the Hohenzollerns, that the leadership of the Baltic aristocrats stands condemned by even the most elementary selfish consideration—it cost more than it was worth.

PROGRESSIVE HISTORY.

The Vice President-elect was in a happy vein in addressing the Vermont Historical Society. "True history," said Governor COOLIDGE, "while ever a conservative force, yet holds the only warrant for real progress. It is ignorance of its teachings which leads men of good intentions to advocate either reaction or revolution." Both reaction and revolution have served as stages of progress, but have generally led to something quite different from what either intended, and far better.

History itself is subject to the laws of progress. It is as far as the poles from being the thing, fixed and immutable, which fond historians have imagined. It is not merely or even chiefly that it is altered by new researches, the discovery of additional facts. What has chiefly changed it is the development of a new consciousness in each new epoch as to essential principles of life. Once a mere chronicle of wars and dynasties, it soon came to include the lives of all eminent men. In more modern times it reached out to find a truer foundation in the development of nations as such. The rise of the mercantile world, and of a knowledge of its laws, led the first enthusiasts of socialism to find that the real basis of history is economic. Repentant Socialists, repelled by this harsh materialism, have found a truer basis in psychology—in the growth of the human soul. Quite recently students of anthropology have found, or have thought they have found, that the determining factor in history is race. As often as a new idea has been thrown into the lap of the muse, she has found that her raiment is transformed, her very character. She is the chameleon of muses, taking all her color from the changing time.

Satirists of history have enumerated some scores of causes, to each of which has been attributed, solely or chiefly, the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. Far from invalidating historic art, that gay compilation gives it its chief warrant. Could any one in the eighteenth century know a tithe of what we do of the working of economic law; of the instincts of nationality, of the subconscious forces of race? In the discovery of a new truth, which is our own special truth of today, we are likely to become enthusiasts; but enthusiasm is the stuff of which the arts are made, even this soberest of them all. When there is no enthusiasm there will be no more history; the story of the world will cease to be important when it ceases to be rewritten for each epoch in the light of the ideas that are nearest and dearest to it.

"That form of government," says Governor COOLIDGE, "which is based on "the rule of the people through a republic is the ultimate form." For us of today that is truth itself. But why this limitation upon the wardrobe of the muse Clio, ever shifting and ever renewed?

GOLF AND OBESITY.

That a fat man can't play golf is a common saying. He is thought to be ashamed even to try. The most that is admitted of a skillful player, like the former amateur champion, Mr. HERRON, is that he may be "chubby." Outright obesity is regarded as an anomaly or a fatal disqualification on the links. The typical golfer is always supposed to have a lean and hungry look.

Yet golf is proclaimed as a cure for stoutness. So that some fat men must have larded the greens in their efforts to make their too, too solid flesh melt. In England, where they pursue the inner mysteries of golf with sublime earnestness, this subject has recently been studied scientifically. Exhibit A was composed of ten men over 80 years of age who play golf regularly. Whether so many could be caught outside of England is doubtful, but as Ambassador CHOATE wrote when he heard of a nobleman marrying at 82, "the English are a wonderful people." The point is that of these ten octogenarian golfers not one was stout, only one was "moderately stout," while all the rest were lean, or reasonably so.

The critical or the cynical may object that you almost never see a fat man over 80, whether a golfer or not. But the scientific inquirer is ready for the enemy on that point. Six of his ten 80-year golfers had been stout at 50. It was the game that had brought down their weight and relieved them of uncomfortable embonpoint. The physiological reasons for this are duly given. Swinging golf clubs opens the chest and gives the oxygen a chance to burn up the material which otherwise would be laid down as fat. Thus the unhealthy stout man grows leaner on the links. It is a simple cure: merely a case of solvitur ambulando.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

An argument used in the House of Representatives the other day, when the question of increasing the membership to 483 came up, was that the House of Commons had a larger membership. This was really a boomerang argument, for the popular chamber in England is crowded, uncomfortable, ill ventilated, and its accommodations for the lawmakers are primitive. On this point let one of its members, Lieut. Col. GERALD B. HURST, be quoted:

> Other assemblies are housed in rooms which are adequate for their numbers, which are circular in shape, and which are furnished with appropriate desks. Ours finds sitting accommodation for barely half its personnel in a chamber of an inconveniently oblong shape, and with no ledge for ink or for papers in front of members. * * * We may enjoy no desks; but, on the other hand, we throw no inkpots.

In an article in The Nineteenth Century, from which the above is taken, Colonel HURST calls the House of Commons the Mother of Parliaments, but he speaks frankly about some of its shortcomings. It is because the Mother of Parliaments is august with age, and has long enjoyed a reputation for dignity, common sense and practical legislation that here in America we are inclined to look up to it as a model for deliberative assemblies. It continues to be old-fashioned in its consideration for the men who do business there; that is to say, they are expected to work under physical disadvantages. By comparison the House of Representatives, with its liberal floor space, comfortable seats, desks for papers and writing materials, and numerous committee rooms, is luxurious. In fact, in so many ways are the ease and convenience of the American Representatives consulted that conditions in the House of Commons seem archaic. When it comes to the conduct of business and the behavior of the respective lawmakers in these unsettled times, the Americans have nothing to extenuate or apologize for. Their House of Representatives is the more sober and dignified body, although it does have inkpots to throw if it wants to do so. The House of Commons sometimes resembles a bear pit; it has degenerated in manners and deportment, whereas the House of Representatives has improved in both. Enemies of Mr. LLOYD GEORGE say that he sets a bad example in the House of Commons. A savage critic observes:

> The House of Commons was once the greatest instrument of its kind in the world, but Mr. LLOYD GEORGE has played on it like the leader of a jazz orchestra till all is noise and vulgarity.

But to hold one man responsible for the unseemly behavior of his associates is to exhibit narrow partisanship. The House of Commons has gradually become an unruly as well as an unwieldy body. The scene the other day, when members howled like jackals and lost all self-control when JOSEPH DEVLIN, with his fighting spirit up, defied the once august assembly, was a reproach to British traditions. It may be true that the Irish members have occasionally been irresponsible and offensive, but in the past it was proudly said—it can no longer be justly said—that the House of Commons was an assembly of gentlemen, even if they did sometimes forget themselves. Other times, other manners, perhaps! Demos is on the driving seat in England.

Although it is not generally known in America, where we rail at our insufferable talkers and deride "leave to print," the House of Commons is full of indefatigable and tiresome conversers—oratory is no more there. "Too many men," says Colonel HURST, "drift almost unconsciously into the fatal fluency of the House of Commons. In a body of 700 there must always be more people who want to speak on any point of importance than can possibly gain a hearing, and the Speaker's eye ranges at haphazard among the just and the unjust, the experts and the bores." Colonel HURST declares significantly that "the most obvious of all apparent vices is a terrible waste of time in debate." So honors are easy, or perhaps the advantage in loquacity is with the House of Commons. There, as in this country, the statute book is appallingly cumbered with unnecessary laws. But there are some things to be said in favor of England's popular body. Flag-waving is considered bad form. Members are often ruggedly independent. Business men abound; "the lawyers are taboo." Here in America there are far too few business men in Congress and altogether too many lawyers.

LITERARY DISARMAMENT.

Speaking at a luncheon of the Authors' League, Mr. LOWELL BRENTANO lately broached a project for the more efficient advertising of literature. The Publishers' Association estimates that the average American family buys 600 newspapers and magazines a year and but one book. In the entire country there are only some 200,000 "persistent book buyers"—one-fifth of 1 per cent. of the population. How to reach the other 99 4-5 per cent.?

It is not just like advertising soap or soda biscuit. When the consumer once begins buying these commodities he is likely to keep on. The manufacturer does not have to create a new customer for each cake of soap, each cracker. But when the bookseller has sold one volume he has to begin all over again with a new one, or a new customer. Obviously, a different technique is required, a more refined approach—something like that of the florists. "Say it with books" would be an obvious crib; but how about "a house without books is a house without windows"? The Publishers' Association and the Booksellers' Association have combined for a three years' advertising campaign in which they are to spend $100,000 yearly.

There are, however, difficulties. At present 10,000 new books are produced every year. To carry in stock even a single copy of each new book would require a yearly investment of some $12,500. The oversupply reacts against the author. As soon as he produces a new novel his previous novel becomes "old." The public refuses to buy any book but the latest and warmest from the griddle. Thus rapid-fire production, which many publishers urge upon their authors, results in arresting their progress by the simple but painful process of stepping on their own toes. So Mr. BRENTANO advocates what he calls literary disarmament. Make the books fewer, and proportionately better. Make them worthy of a three years' advertising campaign.

It is a project that commands the admiration and sympathy of all who believe in higher education. One may not agree with Mr. BRENTANO that it is vitally necessary to lessen the number of those who think REX BEACH is a Summer resort, but it is certainly desirable to keep them from asking "What are KEATS?"

PROFIT IN FOREIGN TRADE.

The imposing names associated with the Foreign Trade Financing Corporation are an assurance both that it will have business to do and resources with which to do it. The important consideration of how that business shall be done depends on the character of the corporation itself, and that will be formed partly by the law under which the corporation works, and for the rest by the character of its head. The law puts the corporation under the observation of the Federal Reserve Board, and there is a well-advanced movement to borrow from the board its Governor as the organizer of the corporation. There could be no better assurance of co-operation between the domestic and foreign business of the country than the transfer of Governor HARDING to a position full of perplexities and responsibilities of a novel sort. It is no small sacrifice to undertake the new task. But Governor HARDING is still in his early maturity, well within the age when adventure is stimulating, and any doubts might well be settled by his consciousness of support based on recognition of what he already has done. Although his acceptance is not yet announced, it is likely that his address in this city, before what he called the "most powerful banking group in the world," was made in anticipation of the expected transfer. The views he then expressed are significant as a declaration of policy. His view was a world view, far broader than the vision of those who regard Europe as "abroad." Trade with Europe is "vital" to us, he said, but also "the trade relationships of other countries with Europe" are scarcely less important. That is so because they have been accustomed to sell to Europe, but now Europe cannot pay them, and they cannot extend credit against such commerce. The triangular dealings in exchange which heretofore have been done through London will be done mostly through New York for a time, and later will be divided with London and other foreign centres. This is the opportunity which knocks but once. It is not a windfall or gift, but a chance to earn and deserve the leadership conditions have thrust upon us.

The $30,000,000 loan announced last week to Belgium for the purchase of wheat is an illustration of what foreign trade will do for the farmers. As conditions are, it is the next best thing to an exchange of goods for goods. We are learning that if we wish to sell on a great scale we must lend on a like scale; that if we do not lend we must buy in order to sell, unless we are prepared to give our goods away, as some among us are actually now proposing. In order to sell we must produce at the world level. That can be done by us only in quantity production, with its result of a surplus by-product which we are under compulsion to dispose of either by barter or by taking promises running through a term of years beyond foresight. Trade on our scale must be financed here, in the present posture of world commerce.

If those fundamentals are followed through, it appears why such novelties cannot well be done by law, and should not be done by Governments. It is everyday business for traders to make their own special bargains. Governments should not take risks with taxpayers' funds, and bad debts between Governments rank with dishonored scraps of paper. That these trade relations should become a matter of politics and votes is an invitation to reduce them to the disorder and sordid basis of the domestic politics of many countries. It is a banker's duty to know when to say no—something politicians never learn. It is no less a banker's duty to say yes in some doubtful circumstances. Governor HARDING has said both yes and no. His no to the inflationist farmers speaks well for his courage, and there will be future demands upon it. It is not likely that he undervalues the opportunity offered to him as well as to his country, and his declination will not be presumed until it comes from him.

RELIGION ON THE FILMS.

A praiseworthy attempt to reconcile religion and the motion picture, which some of the blue-law faction would keep forever asunder, is being made by a company preparing motion pictures for church audiences. A circular on the needs of the scenario department announces that "except that the sex question is taboo, the only positive requirements are that the themes be dramatic and unhackneyed and have a moral." All movies have morals, usually quite unassailable; but any effort to introduce unhackneyed themes into the picture world deserves support. The announcement adds that "Bible stories, recast in modern setting, are greatly desired."

Among the Bible stories which come readily to the mind as suitable for the film, and with a moral purpose, may be mentioned the story of MICAH, his mother, his priest, and the Danites; and perhaps a photodrama on the career of a practical manager of an idealistic politician might be based on the biography of JOAB.

POLITICS AND PATRIOTISM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The subject of the neglect of our disabled soldiers is claiming much space in the public press just now. The most important feature of this state of public mind which has permitted present conditions has, I think, been entirely overlooked. The neglect of the disabled soldier is the logical result of the studied policy of the politicians, and this attitude is reflected by the public.

The Republican Party all but ignored the soldier in its platform, and did ignore entirely the great cause for which the soldier fought. The campaign was fought and won on the theory that nothing must be said that would offend the pro-German and pacifist vote. Certain elements of our population were so obsessed with hatred of Wilson, the Commander-in-Chief of the American Army that broke the Hindenburg line, that it was policy to ignore the soldiers that actually broke the line.

I have a number of Republican friends whose Americanism has never been questioned, but who followed so loyally the course marked out by the Republican chiefs of the campaign that from force of habit of apologizing for our part in the war they are now pro-German. The effect of suppressing their Americanism was psychological, and now they are wanting in their natural Americanism.

The denunciation of our Allies is also a potent cause for lukewarmness to the soldier. It is a principle of law that when a partnership is sued it is a suit against each individual member of the firm. The Allies and the United States were full partners in the prosecution of the war. The British soldier died by the side of the American soldier. And to denounce one of the Allies (or partners) is to denounce all.

During the present session more words of praise have been spoken for the Sinn Feiners killed in Ireland than for the 60,000 dead American boys in France. The Sinn Fein cause has been championed by more oratory during the present session of Congress than the cause for which we entered the war. For every one hundred words spoken in denunciation of England there has been perhaps one in condemnation of Germany for drenching Europe in blood.

BRITISH FLAG RESPECTED.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am sure that a majority of Irish persons here and Irish persons now naturalized citizens of the United States resent and deplore the action of the Lord Mayor of Cork in sneaking into this country as a stowaway, and feel that no testimony which he can give at Washington excuses or warrants such an undignified act and such a breach of international etiquette.

Anticipating the tercentenary anniversary on Dec. 21 last, I had long planned to express the profound love and respect which I feel for my forefathers who landed at Plymouth, Mass., in 1620, by hanging out the British flag with our own Stars and Stripes on that day. For obvious reasons it was an occasion which would not occur again for me, and I wished to do honor to the country from which the Pilgrims came.

But I had a later and second reason for doing so. I wished, as it were, to register a vote of confidence in the Irish people of this city. Among my household are five Irish-born women, and when I said to some of them as I was about to hang out the flags, "I hope none of you will mind," they replied, "No, indeed; we do not believe in carrying these quarrels to America."

And so my flags hung out all day on Dec. 21 without any protest, though I live near the Cathedral, not far from a public school and in a street where a great deal of construction is now going on.

FEDERAL POLICE COURTS.

New Laws Overburdening the Judges with Petty Criminal Cases.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There has been in the last few years a startling transfer of police jurisdiction from the State to the Federal courts. Some of it is due to the United States statutes, such as the White Slave act and the Harrison Drug act, both based upon a somewhat strained construction of the Constitution. The White Slave act does not regulate interstate commerce, and the Harrison Drug act does not produce any appreciable revenue. The real intent of the one is to conserve the morals of citizens, and of the other to restrain drug addicts. Then came the States and by the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment in effect surrendered to the United States the regulation of the liquor traffic. The result is that almost everywhere the Federal courts are burdened with a great mass of police court cases which have precedence on their dockets. These courts, which were intended to be, and should be, tribunals of high dignity and importance, are now occupied with innumerable cases, which, if the States had jurisdiction, would be tried and adjudged by Justices of the Peace.

Not only is the traditional respect for the Federal courts being worn away, but the Federal Judges are so burdened and harassed that many of them have little time to give to their civil business.

In criminal cases, no matter how trifling the offense charged, the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution gives every defendant in a Federal court the right to a trial by a jury of twelve men. Therefore, there seems only two ways by which the Federal courts can be relieved. Congress may create additional courts with criminal jurisdiction, or a constitutional amendment may be adopted under which Congress could confer upon the United States Commissioners criminal jurisdiction similar to that exercised by the police justices of the several States. It is not fair to the people or the courts to permit the courts to be overwhelmed by a police jurisdiction which was never contemplated when these courts were organized.

COOLIDGE IN THE CABINET.

To the Editor of The New York Times.

It is rather interesting to note the unanimity and enthusiasm with which the Republican press approves and applauds President-elect Harding's decision to have Vice President Coolidge sit in his Cabinet for conference and counsel.

For two years past the Republicans from platform and through the press have exhausted their vocabulary in their bitter criticisms of President Wilson because in their opinion he was in an indirect way seeking to influence the views and acts of the Senate (a co-ordinate branch of the Government), and that it was the limit of insolent autocracy for the Executive thus to seek to impress his personal views upon the legislators in the conscientious discharge of their sworn duty.

And now behold! Two months before these Republican critics "come to the throne," their President proclaims to the country that immediately after the inauguration he will invite the Republican President of the Senate to sit with him in his official Cabinet and thus to aid by his presence and counsel in the consideration of the problems of the country, and from these Cabinet meetings Mr. Coolidge is to return to the Senate to preside (supposedly) impartially over the debates between the Republican and Democratic statesmen as they contend vigorously in championing their respective views on pending measures.

This proposal of Mr. Harding is not only without precedent, but seems in utter violation of all rules of procedure, for it is the universal custom for Judges in our courts to voluntarily disqualify themselves from sitting in a case where an issue is joined between parties one of whom is a friend of the Judge; but now the Judge (in this case Vice President Coolidge) proposes to confer confidentially with his friends, the leaders of the Republican Party, and then at once to ascend the bench and deliver his rulings as to issues before him joined between friendly Republican and critical Democratic leaders.

Could there be a more dangerous suggestion? And if President Wilson's published letter to friendly Democratic Senators was not only an unpardonable sin, but a crime committed by earth's most frightful autocrat, because it might influence a Senator, by what process of reasoning do these Republican editors now join in a mighty anthem of praise as they acclaim Mr. Harding and his proposed plan (accepted with thanks by Mr. Coolidge) to have the presiding officer of the Senate as the President's confidential adviser and the representative of the Administration and the President and his Cabinet?

TAXING TAX EXEMPT SECURITIES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Aside from the wisdom or justice of holding up the man whom you have induced to lend you his money, would the taxing of tax exempt securities, as proposed, yield the expected $240,000,000? Would the owners of these securities be content to stand idly by while their returns were either diminished or wholly confiscated, or would they dump them on the market still further to depress their market value? In the future, would Uncle Sam, our States or municipalities be able to borrow money at the same rate of interest they are now paying?

WILLIAM D. KEMPTON.

FOOT OF THE CLASS.

"You have no ambition!" my critics cried—
"You with your gifts!" one said, and sighed.
And another the case against me sealed
With the story of talents not made to yield.
They were my friends—these critics warm—
And their charge they set forth in excellent form.

All of them showed how I stood in arrears,
With account unrendered these many years:
Good to my fellow-man left undone,
Heights supernal I never had won!

How should I meet them? A wastrel, I,
Talents and gifts I might not deny.
Use of them? No, not in measure meet!
And rust will o'ergrow, if one does not compete.

Then, happily, into my memory came
A story of one who will never know fame—
Of a dear little girl whom once I knew,
Whose mother was sad when no prizes she drew,
And ever would ask, in the mother's way,
"Who went to the head of the class today?"
For always she hoped—in the mother's way—
And hung on the words her darling might say.

But her darling's answer was still the same:
At the head of the class was some other name!
With a generous joy the tale she told,
Of schoolmates on honor lists enrolled.
What wonder the mother cried out in despair,
"The foot of the class—must you always be there?"
And the child, with her wide-eyed look, perplexed,
Grieving a little that mother was vexed,
Answered still cheerfully—answered (alas!):
"Why, some one must be at the foot of the class!"

I told this tale to the critics, my friends,
And strove to excuse me—to make amends.
"I will only add," I cheerfully said,
"I am pleased when my schoolfellows forge ahead.
And faster they forge ('tis plain to my mind),
If some one is willing to stay behind."

BOLSHEVIST CHANCES STEADILY DECLINING

Political Discord Undermining Their Regime as Material Conditions Grow Worse.

CAN'T TRADE WITH WORLD

British Insist on Conditions Lenin Cannot Fulfill—Collapse Nearer Despite Intense Propaganda.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—Events in Russia are rapidly approaching a stage where the stability of Bolshevist rule has been seriously shaken. The best informed observers of Russian affairs here have always been chary of rash prediction even when movements which to others seemed most promising have indicated on the surface a possible solution of the country's problems. But in the last few weeks there has come a change and it is not too much to say that the collapse of Soviet power is now confidently expected by some of the most conservative within the present calendar year.

With world revolution as its planned ultimate goal, Bolshevism, in the opinion of American officials who are in possession of confidential reports covering every phase of the situation, military, financial, economic, political and psychological, is not only proving itself to be a complete failure in Russia but is doomed speedily to be overthrown there. Leaders in the Soviet movement still profess to be hopeful of spreading and fastening their baneful doctrines upon the rest of the world. Georg Tchitcherin, the Bolshevist Foreign Minister still works until 4 o'clock in the morning, losing no possible chance to take advantage of any weakness in the Governments opposed to Bolshevist policies. But the best official analysis of the situation is that Moscow is steadily losing ground both at home and abroad.

This is the worst Winter the Russians have ever experienced. Industrially, financially and economically the region of the former Czar's once mighty empire is now known to be collapsing under the blight. The crops have failed. Transportation has descended to even lower levels of inefficiency. There is a coal famine. Factories are inoperative. Mines, flooded with water, are not in use. Shipping is congested in Bolshevist harbors through lack of fuel, and even if large supplies of raw materials were available for export—which they are not—the disintegration of railway transport, and the refusal of the Governments to accept Russian gold of doubtful title, seized from private owners, render trade with the rest of the world impossible.

The latest official reports concerning actual conditions are now fully accepted here as demonstrating the wisdom and foresight of the American policy toward Russia, outlined in Secretary Colby's famous note of Aug. 10. The last reported impasse in the attempt of Leonid Krassin to negotiate in London a trade agreement between England and Soviet Russia is confidently expected to be followed by the breaking off of present relations as soon as Krassin, now en route to Moscow, makes personal report on the attitude of the British Government toward the changed situation.

No Agreement with England.

American officials mince no words in predicting that England will conclude no such agreement with the Bolshevist régime for the very simple reason that it is now fully apparent to the British Government that Russia, under communist control, is physically unable to furnish raw material as a basis for trade, and that Moscow is unwilling to meet the British demand for cessation of communist propaganda and revolutionary activities in India and the Near East. While there are efforts to make it appear that Krassin is proceeding to Russia with a modified form of trade treaty with England, the most authentic information is that Krassin has taken back at best only a tentative draft agreement embodying England's views as to the prerequisites of trade, and these are known to be of such a character that Lenin is almost certain to find them impossible of acceptance.

Practically all countries have now removed their restrictions against trade with Soviet Russia but no real results have been achieved in the promotion of commercial relations. Not only is there no trade between the United States and Soviet Russia, despite the fact that restrictions against trading with Russia have been raised for more than six months, and no embargo exists against the importation of Russian gold into the United States, but the best information from abroad discloses a similar state of affairs. Such Russian gold as has been shipped into this country is not redeemable at the Federal mint and has become a veritable white elephant on the hands of the very few possessing it. Despite reports to the contrary, there is also no trading between England and Russia. No goods are coming out of Russia and British merchants are chary of accepting Russian gold for reasons similar to our own, especially since the recent adverse British court decision. Rumors that British banks have accepted some of this gold are now known to be untrue.

Rival Groups Bolder.

Not only is the Bolshevist material outlook blacker than ever, but the best informed opinion in Washington is that political conditions are steadily becoming more threatening. This is unmistakably disclosed in copies of the official newspaper organs from Moscow and Petrograd reaching the State Department. The State Department yesterday made public a printed memorandum of nearly two hundred pages, demonstrating the extent to which rifts in the Bolshevist régime in Russia have appeared since the Second Congress of the Communist Internationale at Petrograd-Moscow last July and August. The memorandum consists of direct translations from the official newspapers of Soviet Russia, comprising the Congress and selections from an embarrassingly large number of signed articles and editorial comments in Soviet newspapers giving the Bolshevist interpretation of the meaning and results of that gathering.

These documents show that the Congress of the Communist Internationale was not such an idyllic feast of unity and harmony as Bolshevist propaganda reports indicated. There is proof of violent difference of opinion and bitter protest against the "steam-roller" methods applied to the opposition. Some among the foreign delegates especially were indignant to discover that they had been invited to Moscow not to confer, but to submit. Well-informed students of the Russian situation in Washington have held for many months that the downfall of the Bolshevist régime would be hastened more through factional splits within communist ranks in Russia than through any other immediate prospective development. It is now clear that the split within the Bolshevist ranks is taking more formidable shape, in the formation of distinct communist groups, vigorously opposing one another.

These rival communist groups are now clearly defined. They constitute intellectual divisions of Soviet politics, rather than physical divisions at present, and personal disputes arising between the leaders of the respective groups have so far been confined to the Communist party conferences.

First comes a group advocating "direct action." It is headed by Zinovieff and Boukharin. The members of this group oppose any conciliation with the Mensheviki or other milder elements and are pure extremists. Zinovieff, however, was subjected to severe criticism at the December All-Russian Conference, on account of his mismanagement of the food and fuel commissariats in Petrograd, and he has been endeavoring with difficulty to regain his prestige in the communist party.

Lenin and Trotsky are the prime spirits in the second group, which is a trifle more conservative in appearance as a result of its own bitter experience in trying to conduct the Government. This group professes to favor the establishment of foreign relations and seeks support for its so-called concessions policy, evidently intending to conciliate, both within Russia and abroad.

The third group, controlled by Lunacharsky and Rykoff, is the "extreme right." The foreign trade and concessions policy and the economic reconstruction projects of Lenin and Trotsky have obtained the endorsement and support of this group, which advocates also the calling of a constitutional assembly, opposed by the other groups. It talks of "constructive" programs and "educational reorganization."

Lenin and Trotsky hold the balance of power in the communist organization, but their dictatorship is threatened by the growing strength of both the more radical and the more moderate groups. The bona fides of both Lenin and Trotsky is questioned. The most recent speeches disclose their fixed purpose to precipitate world revolution, if possible, and the military dispositions being made in Russia indicate that they contemplate warlike operations against neighboring States in the Spring if necessary for an eleventh-hour attempt to bolster the shaky foundations of their régime.

Exiled Liberals to Speak.

Simultaneously with these fresh signs of threatened collapse of the Moscow régime, if left by the rest of the world to its fate, the real leaders of the Russian democratic movement have opened sessions at Paris attended by approximately 100 members of the last legally elected Constituent Assembly of Russia. They are meeting under the call of Kerensky, Avksentieff, Minor and other leaders of constructive Russian democratic thought qualified to speak for the democratic liberal elements in Russia.

It is considered in Washington to be both important and significant that such a gathering is being held at such a juncture for the purpose of welding the peaceful elements together into a Russian democratic body which will reflect the ideals of and serve as the mouthpiece for the interior popular movement in Russia against the terrors and miseries of the Moscow experiment. When the Bolshevist collapse does come it is hoped here that out of this gathering may have arisen elements and a program which will start Russia anew upon a higher path.

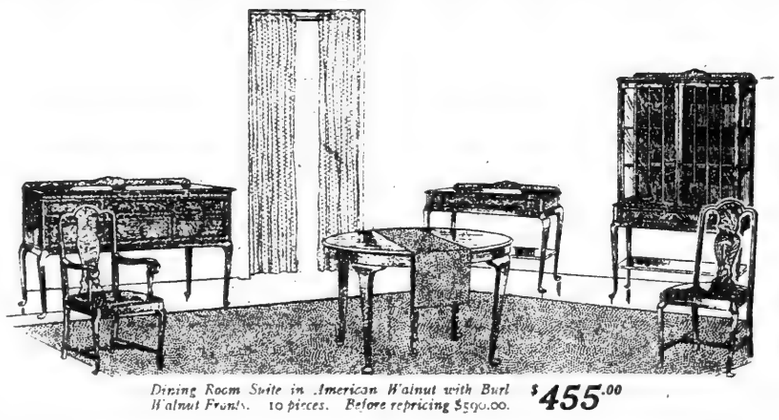
Drastic Price Changes-Permanently Lower



Dining Room Suite in American Walnut with Burl Walnut Fronts. 10 pieces. Before repricing $590.00. $455.00

THREE weeks ago we announced our decision to put into immediate effect a new scale of permanently lower prices.

The decision was based solely upon the economic needs of the day, as they appear to us. We consider it essential, for the good of our own business, that prices be returned as quickly as possible to a level which will ensure consistent buying by the public, and a consequent opportunity for furniture makers to lower their costs upon an assured production basis.

SHOWS COST OF LIVING IS STILL DECREASING

Industrial Board Says Decline Is 11.4 Per Cent. From the Peak in July, 1920.

The cost of living decreased 11.4 per cent. between July, 1920, when the peak of the rise since 1914 was reached, and January, 1921, according to a statement yesterday by the National Industrial Conference Board, 10 East Thirty-ninth Street. The decrease between December, 1920, and January, 1921, was 4.6 per cent. Despite this reduction the average prices on Jan. 1 were still 81.2 per cent. above the pre-war level.

The decrease between December and January was brought about largely by the decline in food prices, which averaged 8 per cent. during the month. The price of clothing dropped 8.7 per cent. within the month, but this item is of less importance in the total budget than is food. There was no change in the average rents or in the average cost of fuel, light or sundries, although changes in individual localities were noted.

"A notable feature of the decline," the Conference Board says, "is the large percentage of decrease shown for articles of food. During the month from Nov. 15 to Dec. 15, 1920, the prices of forty-four articles decreased, with the exception of eggs and raisins. Strictly fresh eggs increased 7 per cent., storage eggs, 5 per cent., and the raisins three-tenths of 1 per cent.

The decreases shown were as follows: Oranges, 27 per cent.; pork chops, 25 per cent.; sugar, 18 per cent.; ham, 13 per cent.; bacon, butter and lard, 11 per cent.; round steak, flour and bananas, 10 per cent. each; sirloin steak, 9 per cent.; rib roast and chuck roast, 8 per cent.; plate beef, bread, cornmeal, rice and navy beans, 7 per cent. each; hens, crisco, and prunes, 6 per cent.; lamb, rolled oats, onions and canned tomatoes, 5 per cent. each; oleomargarine and coffee, 4 per cent. each; fresh milk, potatoes, cabbage and canned corn, 3 per cent. each; evaporated milk, nut margarine, cheese, macaroni, canned peas and tea, 2 per cent.; canned salmon, cornflakes, cream of wheat and baked beans, 1 per cent. each."

HOW REPORTERS GOT THE BALLOON STORY

Strategy and Resource That Gave the Narrative to the Public Despite Handicaps.

CROSS-EXAMINING FARRELL

A Gaff Cut-Off That Produced His Experiences Before Navy Order Closed His Lips.

[From The Ottawa Journal.]

To "scoop" Secretary Josephus Daniels on the story of Hinton, Kloor and Farrell; in other words, to get the story of the "lost" balloonists into the newspapers before the United States Navy Department got it at Washington—such was the task of twoscore United States and Canadian reporters who swooped down upon the amazed natives of Cochrane, Mattice and Clute some ten days ago.

New York reporters are reputed to be daring and resourceful. The writer, eight years ago, saw them smash police restrictions when, on the occasion of the arrival of the Carpathia with the survivors of the Titantic, they strung telegraph wires into the homes of the rescued and got their interviews and "stories" by such means; saw them a few years later charter a large steamer in Quebec to go out and meet the cruiser Essex returning with the victims of the Empress of Ireland disaster, and witnessed them break through police lines in the Halifax catastrophe disguised as workers for the Red Cross. On none of these occasions, however, did the New Yorkers display quite the same ingenuity, resource and disregard for expenditure as when on the trail of the balloonists. They entered Cochrane equipped for any emergency. They came on a special car, with their own chef, with all kinds of provisions, with dozens of typewriters, stationery, books, magazines, confectionery, and even a gramophone, with the latest Indian songs. As for clothing, neither Peary, Stefansson nor Amundsen were ever better prepared for the rigors of the Arctic zone. The little Hudson Bay post at Mattice was swept clean of snowshoes, shoepacks, moccasins, blankets and Mackinaw coats; Cochrane merchants experienced a similar windfall, and prices, responding to the law of supply and demand, simply soared.

Two Likely Trails.

Cochrane, for the first few days, became the G.H.Q. of the crowd. Scouts were sent out on the trail, going out as far as fifteen miles, but the little northern town, immensely pleased at the thought of being "put on the map," was the base. There were two trails by which the balloonists might come—Clute and Mattice. The trappers and Indians in the neighborhood were divided in their opinions, some favoring Mattice and others Clute; and it was therefore found necessary to guard both trails. This was done by sending out Indian runners from both Mattice and Clute. The Redmen were under contract—at a figure that to them must have seemed fabulous—to go out and intercept the balloonists and beat them back to the telegraph station by eight hours. Thus, the correspondents figured, they would be afforded ample time to get to the aviators before the messages of Secretary Daniels commanding them not to talk. Mattice, of course, was a hundred miles away, but an engine stood by night and day under steam, prepared to take the party there within three hours. Two correspondents out of the two dozen broke from the others and decided to play a lone hand—Clermont of The New York American and Crossland of The New York Tribune. Clermont, with two Indians, ten dogs and two toboggans, started out on the Mattice trail, while Crossland, with similar equipment, went out from Clute. Their hope was to meet the aviators fifty or sixty miles out, get their story and make a dash back with the news ahead of all the others. Both men had the worst of bad luck. Crossland, who had never been on snowshoes before, but who insisted on breaking the trail, stumbled on his first day out and was badly bitten by one of the huskies. He had to camp for a day, but finally pushed on more than fifty miles, only to learn from a runner sent out after him that he had taken the wrong trail, and that the aviators were coming into Mattice—100 miles away. This meant that his lone card had been played, and that he had lost, for it was impossible to get back to Mattice in time. He was game, however, sending back this message to the more lucky ones at Mattice:

"You were right and I have lost. Good luck with your story. Hope we'll meet soon again, with different success."

Crossland had expended several hundreds of dollars for his paper, but, through a combination of bad luck, was completely "scooped" on the story.

Met the Aviators.

Nor did Clermont, who pushed on nearly ninety miles, fare much better. He met the aviators, camped with them overnight, got their story, and began his dash back with it, but could not stand the pace. His feet, unused to snowshoes, blistered and bled, he suffered intensely from the cold, and his progress slowed down to not more than fourteen miles a day. On the other hand, the Indian runners sent out by the other correspondtnts, and who met the balloonists the morning after Clermont did, came back like the wind. They even dropped pieces of tallow and cheese along the trail to slow up Clermont's dogs, and arrived in Mattice nearly eight hours ahead of him. Clermont, in fact, could only make Mattice six hours ahead of the balloonists, and not in time to pull off his "scoop," and then fell into the worst kind of hard luck by going on to Cochrane and missing the Farrell-Hinton fight, the best part of the story.

Getting Farrell.

Despite the warning of the Indian runners, the balloonists, who arrived two hours before expected, took the reporters unawares; and before a hundred words could be got out of Hinton and Kloor they had received and read Daniels's message enjoining silence. Fortunately, however, Farrell was a half hour behind the others, and a detachment (of the reporters) was sent out to cut him off from the main force—and Daniels's message—while others remained behind to take care of Kloor and Hinton. Farrell proved easier than the most sanguine hoped for, and the inducement of a cup of hot tea readily lured him into a shack—and into the arms of the newspaper men—about a mile out on the trail.

Here Edward Klauber of THE NEW YORK TIMES, who was elected spokesman for the journalists, put Farrell through a grueling cross-examination, taking him from Rockaway to Moose Factory and back to Mattice, and finally producing the Hinton letters, which later caused such a row. It was just as Farrell had concluded his story that Hinton entered the shack with Daniels's message, getting a punch on the jaw for his pains.

It was one thing to get the story; another thing to get it out. There are only two wires out of Mattice, one via Winnipeg and the other via Quebec; and two wires are of mighty little consequence in carrying 75,000 words within the space of a few hours. The question, therefore, arose as to which reporter of the two dozen should have a first go at the wires. After some hot debate it was decided that the fairest way would be to have a deal of the cards, with the man drawing the lowest card getting first turn on the wire, and the man drawing the highest getting the last, those in between coming in order according to the card they drew, and each man filing 500 words at a time. In this way everybody got a bit of a chance; at 3 o'clock the following morning four operators, handling two wires had sent out 50,000 words; six hours later the New York business man could read the story at his breakfast, and the next day could go and see the whole episode reproduced at his favorite movie theatre.

The Allerton Idea

Allerton House, a residence for business and professional men, is the fulfillment of a new idea in city housing.

The sociability and privacy of a club, the conveniences of a hotel, the pleasant quiet of a home, these are provided at a fraction of the cost of accommodations at a first-class hotel, because essentials have been substituted for useless extravagances.

The Allerton idea of service is expressed in the pervasive atmosphere of comfort to be found equally in its lounges, roof garden, sun parlor, gymnasium and music room.

Allerton House is a residence men are proud to speak of as their home.

NOTE TO THE PUBLIC

The rentals of the new Allerton House, a 17 story residence for men, at 55th Street and Madison Avenue, NOW READY FOR OCCUPANCY, are the same as those prevailing in the present Allerton Houses.

Reliable Automobile Information

Regarding the Rebuilt Car Dept. of the Studebaker Corp. of America
New York City

We do NOT buy cars for cash, speculate or sell Used Cars for a profit

Our Rebuilt Car Department is conducted only as a convenience to the new car buyer who is willing to dispose of his old car at the proper depreciation, rather than sell to the average Used Car Dealer, or dicker with a private party for a big price.

All used cars offered for sale by us, therefore, cost us approximately what a Used Car Dealer pays cash, and his profit we give to you by selling at a lower price, or putting the difference in honest repairs.

Buy a Truly Re-Conditioned Car direct from a $100,000,000 automobile factory in business 67 years and doing a $125,000,000 business each year, For the Price of an Ordinary Second-Hand Car.

SEDAN: This little 1919 Studebaker 5 passenger sedan was taken in part payment for a new big 7 passenger Studebaker. We have re-conditioned this sedan like new, and it is indeed a beautiful and economical ALL-YEAR car. Priced $1,200.00 below new car list. This week only.

NASH: Small 1919 five passenger touring, used very little, and looks brand new. Equipment includes 5 wire wheels, bumper, etc. Will sacrifice.

ECONOMICAL FAMILY CAR: A beautiful 1919 Studebaker touring, equipped with two extra auxiliary chairs, accommodating 7 passengers. Refinished a Brewster green body with black fenders and trim; genuine hand buffed leather upholstery that shows absolutely no wear; top like new, and motor and all moving parts overhauled. This factory re-conditioned car offers every advantage of a brand new car at a substantial reduction.

BUICK: 1920 five passenger touring; used only few months. We have gone over this car carefully and you will find it in exceptionally fine condition. Extreme reduction price $1,150.00 to-morrow only.

BRAND NEW: Driven only 2,100 miles, this late 1920 Studebaker Big Six touring offers a prospective new car buyer an unusual opportunity to secure a new car at a used car valuation.

LIMOUSINE: This 1919 Studebaker Big Six limousine is a very beautiful custom-built job, and built especially for one of the Directors of the Studebaker Corporation of America. If you or one of your friends want a chauffeur-driven enclosed car, this re-conditioned like new limousine offers exceptional value. Priced $1,460.00 below new car list.

FORD SEDAN: If you want a real good Ford Sedan which has had exceptional care and but little used we can offer you a late 1917 model at a very reasonable price.

CLUB-ROADSTER: Priced like a straw hat in December, this late 1919 Studebaker light six cylinder, 4 passenger roadster is our most popular Spring model.

We could sell this car at a good profit in 2 or 3 weeks, but our plan of selling used cars will not permit us to do this, so we offer you a most profitable investment if you act quick.

ALL LATE STUDEBAKER MODELS ARE SOLD WITH OUR STANDARD STUDEBAKER FACTORY GUARANTEE.

If you would get a BARGAIN, and the car of your choice—BUY NOW, before the Spring rush.

United We Stand Divided We Fall

I think we all realize that no one man or any one institution can be anything more than a small factor in teaching all people that the intelligent, systematic practice of Thrift is the salvation of their country and themselves.

Henry L. Doherty & Company, 60 Wall Street, appreciate that their efforts alone will not bring about the universal practice of Thrift, but they do appreciate that if every financial house of moral and stable standing, not only in this city, but throughout the country—if every industrial leader or group—if every organization of whatever nature—will join in working to bring about a National Thrft practice, Thrift will be put over in a wonderful way and our country as well as all people will be benefited thereby tremendously.

It is apparent to everybody with a grain of common sense that united effort will bring success; that divided effort will bring failure.

The broad, unselfish Thrift campaign being conducted by Henry L. Doherty & Company has emphatically demonstrated during a short but intensive campaign (the campaign started Dec. 14, 1920, and here it is only Jan. 23, 1921) that people in all walks of life are very much alive to the importance of holding on to some of the money they earn and investing it wisely so it will bring them a sure, steady income.

Nearly $1,000,000,000 in N. Y. City Savings Banks

Apparently this Thrift campaign has not done New York savings banks any harm, judging from what friend Holland said in his daily letter in the Journal of Commerce last Wednesday:

"Reports from the larger savings banks in New York City showed an increase in deposits of $100,000,000. (meaning during the year 1920).

"On the last day of December these savings banks of New York City held a little under $1,000,000,000 (one billion dollars) of deposits."

(This represents an average of about $160 for every man, woman and child living in Greater New York.)

"In December the deposits exceeded those made in the same month in 1919 by $2,200,000.

"These figures tend to confirm the impression which began to prevail in the early Autumn of last year that the spirit of thrift and the practice of wise economy were characterizing the wage earners of New York. They also show that in spite of reports of prevailing industrial and business depression the wage earners of the State were on the whole well employed. The common opinion seems to be that these gains in deposits must be regarded as among the encouraging symptoms of a return to financial, industrial and commercial strength."

Remarkable Demand for Little Red Thrift Book

The Thrift idea is surely growing—surely sinking into the minds of the people.

Prior to National Thrift Week (which ends today, sad to say), Henry L. Doherty & Company, 60 Wall Street, offered to supply, without cost of any kind, all the Little Red Thrift Books that employers or school teachers or organizations might wish to distribute.

Mr. Doherty asked me what I thought the demand would be. I said "a quarter of a million." He laughed and said that I was away off in my estimate. He estimated that the demand would be a million. He was right. It is for over one million copies which have not all been sent out yet, but they will be as fast as the printers can deliver them.

We are now printing the second million of these Little Red Thrift Books. It is for a good cause and that is the impelling motive behind the Doherty Thrift campaign.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS BELIEVE IN THRIFT

"United we stand; divided we fall" represents the principles upon which the K. of C. acts.

Mr. John B. Kennedy, publicity director of the K. of C., was good enough to write the following letter, which is printed here with his permission, as evidence of sincere co-operation in putting over a national thrift movement and approving the motive of Henry L. Doherty & Company in their efforts.

MR. KENNEDY'S LETTER

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS
Committee on War Activities
New York City
105 West 40th Street,
January 18th, 1921.

Henry L. Doherty & Co.,
60 Wall Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:

I have read with great interest the gospel of thrift as written in yours and Mr. William C. Freeman's press statements, and I am led to wonder whether or not you know that in the Knights of Columbus the country has a unique organization, built up on the principles of collective thrift and sustained by those principles through individual practice.

Founded in 1882 by eleven men under the leadership of a young priest, the Reverend Michael J. McGivney, of New Haven, Conn., to-day the Knights of Columbus is an international organization of 800,000 men, operating exclusively in North America and the possessions of the United States, but known throughout the world as a strong, benevolent union of laymen. The reputation achieved by the Knights of Columbus for war and reconstruction work is the foreground of a career of civic and patriotic utility founded on the spiritual bond of faith and the material bonds of thrift that have tied together the hundreds and thousands of men who have joined and remained in the ranks of the order.

While promoting the religious well-being of its membership, the Knights of Columbus, from its very inception, was a thrifty organization—an organization practicing collective thrift and preaching individual thrift. In less than forty years it has built up the strongest, or at least one of the strongest, fraternal insurance systems in the world—235,000 men from 18 to 70 years of age holding certificates in the organization. In its career the K. of C. has paid beneficiaries to approximately that number of men, sums varying from one to three thousand dollars. And through sick benefit funds councils of the organization have paid out millions of dollars to thrifty members who were encouraged to subscribe to those funds on the tontine and other bases.

About two hundred Knights of Columbus buildings stand in as many cities in this country and Canada, built by the thrift of members who took stock in the building corporations. I believe it is no exaggeration to say that the 2,000 councils of the K. of C. are so many local headquarters for the spread of the thrift movement because the lecture programme carried out by these councils never fail to include practical talks by bankers and others familiar with the mechanism of investment.

The board of directors of the Knights of Columbus, every item of whose financial dealings as a board is made public to the entire membership, invests yearly many millions of dollars of K. of C. funds, and their management has been so astute that the K. of C. have actually been able to waive many insurance assessments on their members; yet they were able to sustain the extraordinary loss of $1,250,000 during the influenza epidemic without having to increase their rates.

THRIFT SO WELL PRACTICED AT THE TOP OBVIOUSLY CARRIES ITS MORAL TO THE BOTTOM.

The Knights handled their war welfare fund of $40,000,000 without charging a cent to overhead expenses, because through intelligent purchasing and prompt payment of bills—which have as much to do with the practice of thrift as actual investment—they obtained discounts sufficient to meet all overhead costs.

FOR ABOUT FORTY YEARS THE K. OF C. HAVE PREACHED AND PRACTICED THRIFT. They will preach and practice thrift so long as they continue an active organization. They believe that thrift is not a matter of "driving" or "campaigning," but the planning and effecting of a substantial, permanent growth, the inclining of the mind of the wage earner to the habit of thrift and safe investment. They are ready always to co-operate with every enlightened and disinterested movement to spread the gospel of thrift, and I believe their record is a sufficient warranty of the value of their co-operation.

May I add that we are tremendously interested in your efforts to instil in the minds of all people the necessity of practicing thrift? Cordially,

(Signed) JOHN B. KENNEDY.

Mr. Kennedy, in a personal conversation with me in my office Thursday afternoon, Jan. 20, 1921, said:

"Mr. Doherty and associates have struck the right note in urging everybody to practice thrift.

"Not only is it a duty for every worker to lay aside from his earnings enough to maintain an account in a savings bank—to pay life insurance premiums—but he should invest in the securities that keep going the industries of the country. In addition, the K. of C. teaches benevolence and brotherhood of man, which they consider important.

"This will be a very fine world for all of us if we will only live by the budget system—dividing our incomes as follows:

"1. Family needs.
"2. Family support of church, school and service to community, to State and to nation.
"3. Family bank account.
"4. Family insurance.
"5. Family investments.
"6. Family pleasures.
"7. Family benevolences.

"These are seven fundamental points that the K. of C believe should be practiced by every family in America."

Henry L. Doherty & Company will be glad to answer all letters asking for advice as to investments, and they will also be glad to receive callers at their offices, to whom they will explain how the proceeds of Thrift may be wisely placed into sound securities. Do not hesitate to write or call, no matter how little you may have laid by.

* * *

Sincerely yours, WILLIAM C. FREEMAN,
117 West 46th St., New York City.

Every Duo-Art is a piano of high quality either for hand playing or practice; unaltered in tone or action by its reproducing feature.

The five famous pianos in which the Duo-Art may be had are the Steinway, Steck, Wheelock, Stroud and magnificent Weber.

As a Pianola the Duo-Art offers to the lover of music who does not perform by hand, the opportunity to play the piano himself.

With the use of any 88-note music-roll, after a short period of practice, most artistic and satisfying results may be obtained.

When playing Duo-Art Artists' Record-Rolls, all that is required is a steady, even pumping with the feet. The Duo-Art does the rest.

The DUO-ART
Reproducing Piano

The Duo-Art Piano is the 20th Century development of the Piano. It is the wonderful means by which the great musicians can enter your home to give you of their best—right at your own fireside

IMAGINE, if you can, your piano ringing with the marvelous touch of the great Paderewski! Think of the fingers of the great masters stealing over the keys as you sit and listen—pouring forth for you the genius and art that only they possess! The greatest piano masters of the world—Paderewski, Hofmann, de Pachmann, Bauer, Cortot, Friedman, Gabrilowitsch, Grainger, Ganz, and scores of others have made Duo-Art Record-Rolls, which are available for anyone who owns a Duo-Art Piano.

Think of the greatest classics of all time being executed with most brilliant artistry on your piano!

Think of accompaniments played with perfect sympathy, so that one who sings may always have an accompanist at hand. Picture having plenty of splendid dance music—ever ready, tireless—perfect in rhythm—the latest fancies from musical comedies and operas!

This wonderful Duo-Art Reproducing Action brings to your home the Music of the Masters. As it sounds when their fingers touch the keys, so you hear it at home—it is their art in all its perfection.

The Duo-Art Is Also a Pianola

Consider what a delightful thing it is to play yourself without years given to the study of an instrument—without any great natural talent! The Duo-Art Piano is also a Pianola—and with the enormous variety of music-rolls available you can play any and all music; simply guiding the tempo, volume and accent yourself.

The Pianola has brightened many a home—has disclosed many latent musical talents. It has been the second great step in the development of that great home instrument—the Piano.

A Pianoforte of High Quality

Remember, too, the Duo-Art is a regular piano for hand playing; that any member of your family who plays or wishes to study and practice will find its tone and action unchanged by its two other great features. For those who play by hand the Duo-Art Piano holds added inspiration. Through the Artists' Record-Rolls the actual playing of the great pianists can be studied at close range. Their art may be your goal.

Duo-Arts are obtainable in the exquisite Steinway—in the fine, durable Steck—in the well-known Wheelock and Stroud, moderately priced and of excellent quality—and in the world-famous, rich-toned Weber. The Duo-Art is made in both Grand and Upright models. The musician will find his ideal instrument in one of these standard makes.

The Duo-Art may be operated in two ways—by electricity and with pedals. The instrument illustrated above is the Stroud foot-impelled Duo-Art Piano. Its price is only a little more than an ordinary player-piano of similar quality. A small down payment will place this magnificent instrument in your home—the balance may be paid upon concerning a national problem, as is their right, we must be sure that what we propose is not only economically sound and practically wise, but that it is in accord with modern conceptions of social decency and fairness."

Mr. Kahn said he saw no reason why the country should consider itself rigidly obligated to set aside $300,000,000 each year as a sinking fund to amortize the war debt, and that he thought the debt could be reduced when times are good and that the fund might suspend its operations when times are bad. He also advocated that the floating debt be paid, not out of bonds, but out of taxation, and that if it cannot be done in two or three years, it might be done in four or five years. Putting another issue of Government bonds on the market at present would have a disturbing effect, in his opinion. Mr. Kahn said he did not see how anything practical could be done to restore Liberty bonds to their original price, but that he thought they would advance if the tax system were revised on sensible lines.

Mr. Kahn does not agree with Dr. Adams on the sales tax, and advocated an experiment of a turnover tax of one-third of 1 per cent. He said he felt the only way to settle the conflict about this tax was to try it.

"I favor a tax on commodities," he continued, "on every sale all the way through the various stages from producer to ultimate consumer, as against a tax on retail sales only, first, because it seems to me fairer, being of universal application; second, because it would be exceedingly difficult, if not actually impracticable, to establish a clear and workable definition and regulation as to what constitutes a retail sale, and the burden of interpreting and enforcing that definition as against his customers and of collecting the tax would be thrown upon the retailer, and, thirdly, because I doubt whether a retail sales tax, even at a rate four or five times as high as the one-third per cent., which I suggest for a turnover tax, would be adequately productive.

Against Tax on Stock Sales.

"It may well be asked why a turnover tax or sales tax should be limited to commodities only and should not include financial dealings. The answer is that if the turnover effected by the intricate and vast machinery of finance were to be subjected to any general tax the resulting disturbance would be of incalculably far-reaching effect. What the financial dealer sells—whether bank, banker or broker—is not commodities, but services and interest.

"We hear much about the principle of laying taxes according to ability to pay. No right-minded man will quarrel with that theory, but it must be applied in the light of actual facts. And the essential facts are:

"1. In contradistinction to much loose talk asserting the two-thirds of the nation's wealth is owned by a small minority of rich men, investigation has demonstrated that of the total income of the nation about 88 per cent. goes to those with incomes of $5,000 or less and barely 12 per cent. to those with incomes of $5,000 or more.

"2. While the consuming power of the nation is attributable fairly proportionately to the whole 100 per cent. of national income, the power which drives the wheels of business and enterprise is furnished to a greatly preponderating extent by means of the 12 per cent. above referred to.

"It follows that while social justice and practical considerations require that a commensurately large portion of the revenues needed by the Government must be derived, directly or indirectly, from the well-to-do, there is a limit beyond which it is not possible to tap that source. Our present system of taxation has exceeded that limit, with results highly detrimental to all elements of the community."

TAKE UP NEGRO PROBLEM.

Southern Churches Will Observe Inter-Racial Sunday Tomorrow.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 22.—Interracial Sunday will be observed tomorrow in churches throughout the Southern States.

Governor Dorsey of Georgia and the Executive Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, as well as others, have endorsed the movement for the Interracial Sunday initiated by the Georgia Interracial Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. Assurances of co-operation have been given in all parts of the South.

"We are convinced that it is high time to direct the Christian thought and to stir up the Christian conscience of America to the needs of the negro of the Southland," the committee declared in its call.

Governor Dorsey said he was deeply interested and anxious for conditions working for a better relation between the races. He urged ministers to "appeal to the conscience of the people for a more even justice in the courts, for better housing and sanitary conditions, for better school facilities, for better traveling conditions, and more patience and self-control, growing out of the spirit of the Christ, in the associations of the two races."

The Georgia Baptist Convention urged its ministers to co-operate "in the effort to secure genuine Christian relations between the people of both races."

CUNARD BOOK FOR SCHOOLS.

"Around the World" Pictures for Children to Copy.

The Cunard Line has put out a book for children which has been distributed in the public schools and is entitled "Around the World Painting Book for Children." As the book opens the pages on the left hand are artistically colored and those on the right are in bare outline, left so for the child to fill in with the colors printed on the opposite page.

The pictures include, the "Western War Front," the "Cathedral of Rheims," the "Tower of London," the "Rock of Gibralta," "Naples and Vesuvius," the "Colosseum at Rome," the "Sphinx," the "Pyramids," the "Holy City of Jerusalem" and the "wonderful Skyline of New York." The book is being distributed free throughout the United States and Canada.

THRIFT vs. SPENDING

To The Public:

As I want you to read whatever communications I may make to you through the press now or at any other time, and in whatever form they may appear, I wish to state that you are not urged to read this page, but are warned against doing so unless you have some specially keen interest in the subjects under discussion. This warning is given because I want you to feel that any message I may hereafter send you is well worth the time required to read it.

There is a nation-wide Thrift Movement being initiated at this time that has many firm supporters. There is also opposition to this Thrift Movement by those who believe it is harmful to business especially at this time. Those advocating Thrift are so confident of getting almost universal public support that they desire to give the widest publicity to everything that can be said for and against Thrift. They believe every "knock," to thoughtful people, will prove to be a "boost."

They desire to have these letters published as a matter of record. While these letters deal primarily with the question of whether Thrift or Spending is best for the country under present conditions, they also incidentally touch upon the Labor Question, the Banking Situation and the Unemployment Problem. They may prove worth reading to those keenly interested in these subjects and to students of Political Economy. If in doubt whether this page is worth reading, I suggest you tear it out and lay it aside to be read at your leisure if the subject becomes one of further controversy. You will undoubtedly hear much about Thrift, for further organization work is going on now to carry it forward upon a still more comprehensive scale.

Yours cordially,

HENRY L. DOHERTY

A BUSINESS MESSAGE

The Buyers' Strike
Thrift vs. Spending

This advertisement was published in this paper Tuesday, January 18, 1921

This is addressed especially to the Retail Merchants, but we hope everybody will read it. This is National Thrift Week, and hundreds of men and women are earnestly at work and want as many more as possible to help them. Thrift does not mean hoarding, but means wise spending either for the comforts of life or insurance or bank reserves or investing. On Monday I received the following letter:

January 17, 1921.

Mr. Henry L. Doherty,
60 Wall Street,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Doherty:

It has been brought to our attention that some of the retail merchants are not in sympathy with a Thrift Movement at this time, believing it will be harmful to their business. We are asking a number of our speakers to assure the merchants that we do not want to hurt their business, but want to help. Will you please do what you can to help us promptly correct this matter?

Let me suggest that you take this up in your talk at the Brooklyn Central Branch of the Y. M. C. A. to-night, and perhaps you would be willing to answer this matter through the press by interview or in your own advertising space.

Very truly yours,
(Sd) W. H. BAXLEY, Secretary,
New York City Thrift Committee.

This appeals to me as a vastly important matter, for we want the support of these merchants, and, as we are already in the campaign and as we can reach so few people with our voices, I am glad to pay for the necessary space in the daily papers to say a little bit of the much we might say about what we hope to accomplish.

All of us who are whole-heartedly supporting the Thrift movement believe it is not only helpful to business but absolutely necessary for business.

As a portion of Thrift Week is already gone, we cannot get together and harmonize our differences of opinion; so the only thing left for us to do is to use space in the daily papers to present our views and invite those who dissent to present their views frankly and in a like manner.

We believe that Thrift and Investment is at all times helpful to business and that it is particularly needed just now. Our non-sympathizers, we understand, think Thrift and Investment is generally a good thing, but that just now it will accentuate the so-called Buyers' Strike.

Some merchants seem to think that an American Federation of Retail Buyers has sprung up over night which in strength and determination is equal to the American Federation of Labor, and that the first thing the new Federation did was to declare a Buyers' Strike.

There is no more of a "Buyers Strike" among the retail buyers than there is a Buyers Strike on the part of the retail merchants themselves. Don't you think that figures would show that the public is buying more from the retail merchant than the retail merchant is buying from the jobber and the manufacturer? How many retail merchants do you think are willing to take the money their retail customer pays them and pass the proper share of it right along to the jobber and to the factory for more goods?

How many merchants do you think are already carrying less than normal stocks?—and how many do you think of those who are carrying normal or abnormal stocks would resist the temptation to reduce their stocks far below normal if they could create enough retail buying to enable them to do so?

Now, we have all seen some wonderfully clever advertisements telling why the people should buy merchandise liberally. I hope every merchant who is not in sympathy with the National Thrift Drive will get these advertisements and read them over and make up his mind how much of the advice given to the retail buyer he will accept for himself and how much of this advice he thinks his fellow merchant will accept.

Let me remind you that our present troubles were brought on largely by wild and extravagant buying on the part of the public. Retail merchants were encouraged to place abnormally large orders to insure against depletion of stocks and rely on their banks to carry them. This, with the load the banks were already carrying, brought a strain on our banking system which carried it to its full elastic limit. Money thereafter had to be rationed. The public in some cases bought until they had become overstocked and the retail merchants in other cases bought until they had become overstocked.

The retail customer does not buy in greater volume, first, because too many man out of employment is not apt to have the money or credit with which to buy and the man who is still employed sees widespread unemployment and wonders how secure his employment is; second, because a large portion of the public think we are going to have still lower prices.

Now, some of the retail merchants do not buy, first, because they fear that the business depression has become so widespread that the future purchasing power of the American people has been seriously crippled; second, because they fear still lower prices; and, third, because they are having difficulty in raising the money necessary to pay their obligations when they come due.

There is nothing in the National Thrift movement which opposes judicious or conservative buying. There is no reason why the merchant should not strive to stimulate buying, and there is no reason why he should not tell his customer that it is his belief that prices have reached the bottom, if he really believes it himself.

But, Mr. Merchant, let's be fair again. We know prices have been abnormally high. We all hoped they would come back to normal in a gradual and orderly manner—that they would evolute, not revolute; but when we reached the limit of our banking credit, and the bankers had to call a halt, then, in many cases, factories, jobbers and retailers had to sell some of their goods for whatever they would bring—and here and there some commodities had to be sold at less than the pre-war cost of production.

Now, what do you think is the greatest threat of further demoralization of prices? I think the greatest threat is to have further forced sales. Don't forget that many, and in fact most, of these forced sales were not due to lack of capital, but due to lack of cash. Don't forget, either, that there are still many factories, jobbers and retailers who are still under a great strain, and although they have an abundance of capital yet they are finding it difficult to find the cash to meet their obligations.

Those of us who are supporting this National Thrift movement believe that money applied to these strained situations will do more to help the mercantile situation than a like amount of money applied to indiscriminate buying. Illustrating perhaps by exaggeration, we feel that if the man who has an appetite to smoke a one dollar imported cigar would content himself with a ten cent domestic cigar, and would say to the sound merchant who is under a strain. "Here is ninety cents that I will loan you to help prevent you from being compelled to make a forced sale of your goods," we think that this would aid the entire business and mercantile situation more than if he had bought and smoked the one dollar cigar. Now, we know that ninety cents would not help very much, and we know that this man, and the man like him, cannot deal direct with the merchant; but all of these people can deposit in some bank, which, in turn, will use it to help out these particularly strained business situations and prevent forced selling.

I know a great many of the men who are working wholeheartedly behind this National Thrift movement. Many of them are merchants themselves. None of them want to interfere with the business of our merchants, but to be helpful to them. If we are wrong, you can tell the people why in the papers tomorrow.

The foregoing letter is but little of what can be said in favor of support of the National Thrift movement, but if what has already been said sounds reasonable, then take a chance and get behind the National Thrift Drive with your whole heart in it. Give the public the assurance that the business men of the country are fully cognizant of the situation, that they are not fearful about it, and will not themselves "hunt cover," and that they mean to correct the situation as rapidly as circumstances will permit, and you will change the mind of the retail buyer over night.

Conservative buying will again start up, and the buyer will pay what price he must, whether he thinks it is the bottom price or not, and more will be accomplished than by any attempt to break up the so-called buyers' strike.

Thursday, if I am not called upon to make further reply along this line, I will tell you some of the reasons why I am a decided optimist on the business outlook provided the employers will get behind a Thrift and Investment Movement and try to show why wise investing is in truth wise spending and will help more than the expenditure which buys something which is consumed.

Faithfully yours,

HENRY L. DOHERTY,
60 Wall St., New York.

NATIONAL PROSPERITY BUREAU

INCORPORATED
Executive Offices, Masonic Building,
NEW YORK CITY.

January 19, 1921.

MR. HENRY L. DOHERTY,
60 Wall Street,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

It is not singular in these unsettled business conditions that both the "thrift" campaign, of which you are an eminent exponent and spokesman, and the "buy now" movement, conducted by the National Prosperity Bureau, should arouse widespread interest. While there is much that is common ground in these efforts, the impression persists in many quarters that their purposes are antagonistic and that your own position in many respects is self-contradictory.

We frankly agree with your views that economy and thrift, under normal conditions, can and will do much good; with your contention that the retailer in many instances is himself engaged in a buyers' strike, and with your premise that economic conditions have been in a large measure the result of extravagant buying. Likewise, we agree with your conclusions that many merchants are disinclined now to replenish their stores because of your stated apprehensions.

To be equally frank, we find ourselves not entirely in accord with your explanations of the causes of these conditions and with your proposed remedies.

The accepted purpose of the "thrift" campaign projected and carried on at this time is to induce the average man to get along with as little as he possibly can and to take the balance of his earnings and place these in a Savings Bank or in an Insurance Company to invest it, or, himself, to invest it in recommended investment securities, thus enabling those institutions to extend credit to clients.

What these clients, whether they be railroads, manufacturing industries or trading concerns, will do with mere currency and without an outlet for their commodities is rather obscure to us. All the money in the world, if there is no demand for and consumption of the commodities which labor is engaged in producing, will not, we fear, relieve the demoralized situation. Obviously, then, the thrift program cannot help us out of the situation.

The root of the entire evil, be the cause of it what it may, is the buyers' strike, and the only remedy is a revival of a public interest in purchasing.

Whether the public is or is not justified in its present apathy is another question. Some say that the public strike is justified because the prices of commodities have not appreciably declined. On the other hand, the position is taken that the buyers' strike is not justified because the price of labor has not equally appreciably declined.

The public cannot on the one hand insist on a maintenance of its present wage-earning scale, and on the other hand justify its refusal to purchase its needs. In any event, to look for pre-war prices as a criterion for prices today, is manifestly unsound, not only because of the reason just stated, but because of the additional burden imposed upon all production by the tremendous war loans now being carried by business as a part of its general overhead.

We are not justifying high prices. On the contrary, we consider it the function of all serious men to help make prices more attractive to the consumer in order to stimulate his purchasing activity.

To our way of thinking, the only real test of fair value is the price of any commodity when it reaches the point at which it becomes attractive enough for the public to purchase it. The ability and willingness of the public to buy and the tendency of business men to enter and compete in new fields which promise large profits are a sufficient gauge, and at the same time safety valve, for determining fair prices at any particular time.

It is because of this interpretation as to what constitutes a fair price of commodities that we cannot agree with your appraisal of the importance which forced sales play in the present demoralization of prices. Admittedly, the thrift campaign is calculated to prevent such forced sales. How ready are these financial institutions to prevent such forced sales into which financially embarrassed clients are driven? Who will answer this question on behalf of the banks? Assuming that the banks or other financial institutions would be rash enough to loan money to clients in such a predicament, how is this client—a manufacturer or dealer or jobber—in a better position to accelerate movement of his merchandise?

To us the danger of demoralization in prices is merely one of the effects of the greater cause which lies in the buyers' refusal to buy, and, concurrently, in the weakening power of the consumer to buy.

The buying power of the American people was at its very highest some months ago, not only because all American industry was then engaged and received the highest remuneration for its labor, but because labor, in spite of its spending orgy, had managed to accumulate money. The buying power of the American people has remained substantially unimpaired, except in spots where unemployment and reduction in wages exist, both of which were directly the result of the public's buying strike. Logically, business conditions will become more aggravated by any increase of unemployment or further reduced wages; they will improve as industry resumes its normal functions, which depend upon the free circulation of the dollar.

These propositions are basic and cannot be waved aside by the optimistic prophecies that all that the "public requires is assurance that the business men are cognizant of the situation"; that they are not fearful about it and will not themselves "hunt cover." Granted that the business men realize the situation, and granted that they are not fearful about it, how are you going to dispense over night with the menace of three million unemployed, with the list growing, and with its power to participate in the market weakening? By what miracle do you believe the mind of the retail buyer will be changed over night in the mere belief that conditions will be corrected by business men "cognizant of the situation and not fearful about it?"

We do not believe the panacea which you propose will reopen mills and replace three million men back onto their jobs. That we realize to be only capable of accomplishment within a reasonable time by an intensive campaign to educate the public to the urgency of keeping up the normal buying of its needs and by teaching manufacturers, traders and retailers the necessity for attracting the public into the market place.

Yours very truly,
NATIONAL PROSPERITY BUREAU, INC.,
By JAMES ROSTHAL,
Director.

This letter is in response to the letter which appears to the left.

January 20th, 1921.

NATIONAL PROSPERITY BUREAU,
Masonic Building,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I received your letter of the 19th at 3:45 P. M. while presiding over a regular monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of Cities Service Company, and owing to this and to several other rapidly succeeding engagements until quite late in the evening I was unable to reply until today.

First let me express my appreciation of the tone of your letter. While I cannot agree with your position, nevertheless I give you credit for being as sincere in your views as I know I am in mine.

If the "impression persists * * * that your own (my) position is self-contradictory" I want to correct it, if possible. I always try to think straight and then try to speak or write my thoughts plainly. If I am wrong in any way I will be glad to be set right, and if I have advocated a wrong policy I will without hesitancy publicly endeavor to make amends. These are times when our difficulties entitle the public to earnest discussion to harmonize differences of opinion rather than argue for the sake of justifying a selfish position.

I have carefully read your letter with an earnest endeavor to preserve an open mind, and it is only fair to you to say that it has not changed my opinion in the least.

You admit in the second paragraph of your letter that the present "economic conditions have been in a large measure the result of extravagant buying." Now, if you had a patient who was suffering from over-eating, you would not resort to forced-feeding when his stomach turned against food simply because he had speeded up his favorite restaurant to a certain volume of business and that therefore this volume of business had to be maintained. Or, if you had a patient suffering from over-drinking, you would not urge him to drink more just because his wine merchant had become overstocked, even though this stock had been contracted for based upon his former rate of patronage.

You say, "The root of the entire evil, * * * is the buyers' strike." * * * Surely you do not mean that the buyers' strike is what has produced our present situation. It is far from a "root." It is a natural reaction from the "spending orgy" which prevailed, and which you speak about in the thirteenth paragraph of your letter. Before the "spending orgy" had spent itself we had reached the point in our financial strain which in the judgment of our bankers required them to call a halt and to place the business world on rationed loans.

I cannot accept, and do not necessarily dispute, the statement you made in the fourth paragraph of your letter. My idea of Thrift is, Work and Earn—Don't Waste. Save part of what you earn and deposit or invest it where it is safe and where it will do you the most good.

There are hundreds of men who have abundant capital who are applicants for the loan of cash from their banks, but the banks are unable to loan them as freely as they need the money or as these banks would like to do; but these banks, and especially the commercial banks, can be depended upon to loan this money wherever it is safe and where it is most needed rather than to loan it purely for their own selfish interest. Inability of many manufacturing concerns to raise cash by the pledge of capital is what has caused the vast army of unemployed. Give them a chance to get cash for the pledge of capital and they will resume operations giving employment to the unemployed, thus re-establishing the purchasing power of the public and enabling themselves to convert capital into cash with which to repay these loans.

People will buy if they have money to buy with—and the world problem has never been to stimulate the need and desire for consumption, but to produce in sufficient abundance what is needed for consumption. What brought us to our present situation was the tendency to consume until we had eaten our seed corn. So I cannot concur in your statement that "Obviously, then, the thrift program cannot help us out of the situation."

We who are advocating Thrift as a cure for our troubles cannot undertake to have either labor or the banks conduct themselves to your liking, but we will gladly join with you to induce the banks or labor to do that which is best for our country as a whole, believing in this present situation that each and every interest will prosper more with a thoroughly sound condition of the country throughout than by having some selfish advantage over others through what may prove a period of great business depression.

You refer to Labor in a way which questions whether its attitude is constructive in the present situation, and I think you may well do so. But do not forget that we are apt to see the faults of others more readily than we see their virtues. The world's progress has largely been brought about by the creation and introduction of labor-saving machinery. We cannot deny that the introduction of every epoch-making piece of labor-saving machinery seriously inconvenienced, and sometimes punished, large groups of wage-earners, and yet we know that Labor could never have enjoyed its present comfort of living and short labor hours that are now possible if it had not been for the introduction of this labor-saving machinery. Every other country has been compelled to fight the false but plausible doctrines of economy that have been advanced to prevent the introduction of labor-saving machinery to a greater extent than have we. Our American Labor has been vastly more constructive than many men give them credit for. And while not defending Organized Labor, I could cite other examples of the virtue of American Labor if called upon to do so. I mention this one example, and state that the position of the merchants who oppose the Thrift and Investment Movement is based on equally false economic premises, and, while highly plausible, is still not so plausible or justifiable as the opposition of Labor to the introduction of labor-saving machinery.

Surely the merchants, unconsciously prompted by selfish interests, do not want to fall into the error of supporting a false economic doctrine that lacks even the plausibility or justification of things which even Organized Labor has not fallen error to. Here is a statement, and I don't see how it can be successfully contradicted by any amount of argument, viz.: The more we create and the less we consume, the greater will be our accumulation of wealth. All the labor for many generations to come can find abundant employment along the lines which create permanent property in the true sense, and the need and desire for consumption does not have to be stimulated to provide employment.

I can neither concur in, nor do I here take exception to, the definition of a "fair price" as given in the tenth paragraph of your letter. My own way of stating the natural laws which fix prices is by saying—Except under emergency conditions natural laws fix as a minimum price the cost of production when it reaches the consumer in final form, and its maximum price is its value to the consumer regardless of its price of production; but, generally speaking, a "fair price" is that which properly, but not unwarrantedly, rewards those who produce and distribute and gives sufficient reward to attract both capital and labor.

Forced sales, however, entirely disregard natural laws as to cost of production, and moral laws as to fair prices and forced purchases do likewise in the opposite direction. The man without water, or sufficient water, stranded on the desert will pay any price he may have to for water—and that brings me to this point, viz.: that I fear that many of our retail merchants failed to console themselves with another very natural application of natural laws. When prices were ascending they found themselves able to sell their goods at more than a fair margin above their cost, and yet they not only failed to set aside a contingent fund on their books, or a contingent thought in their minds that when prices would again descend to normal they would find themselves victims of the reaction of an economic law and compelled to accept some losses, just as they had taken their profits.

Now, just to save you the trouble of calling my attention to the fact that the Treasury's rulings did not adequately provide for this off-setting of profits against inevitable losses, I will admit it. On the other hand, those of us who advocate Thrift do not attempt to defend the present Revenue Law or the Treasury's rulings—and we think the law was a most unthrifty one.

Referring to your quotation of my statements in the fourteenth paragraph of your letter, I wish to say that I had no intention of setting up a mere figment in the minds of the people that was without substance. I stand ready to do my share toward any movement which will arrest further demoralization—but it would be too long a matter to suggest and discuss plans here by letter. The financial trade conditions have been turned many times by co-operation and determination, but I am unable at this moment to refer to any concrete example in the mercantile trades; but any of the frequent examples in the financial world are equally applicable in the mercantile world. Perhaps the most outstanding one in the financial world, and from which you might borrow an example, was the way the Baring Brothers Crisis was met and solved in 1890 by the London banking houses led by officials of the Bank of England. I regret that I cannot at this moment cite you to some book which will detail this to you, but will endeavor to make a search of my library this evening and tell you definitely where you can read up about it.

Now, I hope I have convinced you that we do not want to doctor this patient who is suffering from over-eating by further forced-feeding. He will soon buy and eat more if you do not resort to forced-feeding while he is ill. I also hope this letter will convert you to the Thrift Plan. If it does, get in quick and with your whole heart, for it means, in my opinion, the speediest cure for our ailments. However, whether I have or not, let's not be thin-skinned, and let's try and set an example whereby all of the differences of opinion regarding our big national questions can be settled by earnest discussion rather than by long controversies, whether it is a financial, an industrial, a mercantile or a labor problem.

Yours cordially,

(Signed) HENRY L. DOHERTY.

Decline and Recovery in Stocks —Bank Surplus Restored, Reserve Bank Ratio Lower.

The money market situation was not greatly cleared up by yesterday's week-end bank statements. A surplus reserve was restored at the Associated Banks, as usually happens nowadays in the next statement after a "deficit week," but the reserve ratio of the New York Federal Reserve Bank decreased from 40⅝ per cent. to 38½. This decrease, which brings the percentage to a lower figure than at the end of December, resulted only in part from the increase in reserve held for private banks. It was reduction of $36,000,000 in the actual cash holdings of the Reserve Bank which really caused the lower ratio. Apparently, gold has been shipped from the bank's vaults to the general fund at Washington, but without an equivalent increase in New York's share of that central reserve. If so, it would seem to mean that interior reserve districts have been drawing on New York.

In other respects the statement was somewhat puzzling. Rediscounts, which had been reduced substantially in the two preceding weeks of January, rose $56,000,000 last week and $15,600,000 of the increase was on bills secured by Government collateral, for which a reduction had been reported in every previous week since the middle of December. On the other hand, the Reserve Bank's note circulation was cut down $7,000,000 further last week; it is now lower by $87,800,000 or nearly 10 per cent. than its high mark, reached on Dec. 23, and lower than in any week since the 7th of last February.

On the Stock Exchange the backing and filling movement of the week continued yesterday without change of form. Declines ranging from a fraction to a couple of points occurred in the early trading; then the professional fraternity, to whose energies the declines were plainly attributable, turned about and bought back what they had sold, leaving the market with irregular changes for the day and with several considerable net advances. When yesterday's closing prices are compared with those of the week before it will be found that the changes vary widely and quite meaninglessly, but that, on the whole, advances predominate.

Similar comparison in the bond market shows an almost unbroken list of advances for the week, which reach 4 or 5 points in several issues and exceeds 1 point in a very great number of them. The day's bond market was again active with an upward tendency, and Liberty bonds as a rule maintained their recent gains.

There was no pause in the recovery of exchange rates on Continental Europe; indeed, yesterday's advance affected exchange on such countries as Germany and Austria, which had hardly moved in the preceding day or two. Exchange on Paris sold nearly ¼ cent higher, at 6.96 cents to the franc, the highest since the first days of September; the Belgian rate scored a similar advance for the day, and Scandinavian rates closed with a gain of slightly less than ¼ cent per krone. Sterling on the other hand was fractionally lower, which is partly explained by the fact that French exchange on London, at the close of business Saturday, had moved in favor of Paris 6¾ francs per sovereign during the week. This was a gain of something more than 10 per cent., or nearly as great an enhancement of the value of the franc as has occurred in the same time on the New York market.

MONEY.

SATURDAY, JAN. 22, 1921.

Call money market nominal, no transactions reported on the Stock Exchange. The range for the week was a high of 7 per cent., ruling on Wednesday and Thursday, with the low at 6 per cent. on Monday and Tuesday. On Friday the rate was 7 per cent. all day, which was the highest for renewals since Jan. 12. No "outside" market was reported during the week. For time money the ruling rate for both classes was 6@6½ per cent., although on Friday borrowers raised the bid to 6¾, with lenders maintaining the offering at 6½ per cent. Some choice name commercial paper discounted at 7⅛ per cent. about mid-week, with other names going at 7¾ per cent. The market in prime bankers' acceptances was firm throughout, with no change in quotations.

IN LONDON'S MARKET

Particulars of the Decrease of Security Offerings on English Market in 1920.

New issues of securities on the London market during the calendar year 1920, according to the final London compilations, were the smallest of any calendar year since 1913. They decreased £666,509,800 from 1919 and £1,025,831,800 from 1918, which was the maximum on record. The compilation for the ten past years is as follows:

1920	£ 367,549,600	1915	£685,241,700
1919	1,036,059,400	1914	512,522,600
1918	1,393,381,400	1913	196,537,000
1917	1,318,596,000	1912	210,850,000
1916	585,436,400	1911	191,760,400

Analysis of the distribution of the capital placed in new securities during the year shows that the amount placed in British Government loans in 1920 was £37,580,700 as against £824,635,300 in 1919. Colonial Government loans were represented last year by £11,970,000 as against £13,012,500 the year before. No foreign Government loans were offered in 1920 on the London market; the offerings of that class of securities in 1919 were £1,767,200. British municipalities were represented in the new capital issues of 1920 by £46,581,000, as against £2,865,600 the year before. The most striking changes from the previous year were in subscriptions to new securities of manufacturing and trading companies. The British manufacturing industry was represented last year by new securities for £78,666,000, as against £26,818,500 in 1919. New securities of iron, coal, steel and engineering enterprises were represented by £25,292,100, as compared with £16,280,200. New securities of docks, harbors and shipping enterprises rose from £5,268,500 in 1919 to £18,150,600 last year; of hotels and theatres, from £3,578,600 to £6,452,900.

The comparisons show that the great decrease of total issues of new securities last year as compared with the three or four preceding years was entirely due to the small issues of British Government securities. A comparison with the year before the war shows that the amount of new securities issued by the English Government for business enterprises and subscribed in London, amounted to £328,021,400 in 1920, as against £35,951,200 in 1913, while securities of British colonial dominions were £31,639,800 last year against £76,137,200 in 1913, and securities of foreign countries only £7,888,400, as against £84,448,600 in 1913.

Currency and Reserves in India.

Between Sept. 1 and the end of December, 1920, note circulation of the banks of issue in India decreased from 16,327,000 lacs, to 16,106,000. At the same time gold holdings declined from 3,912,000 to 2,379,000, but silver holdings rose from 5,529,000 to 6,085,000.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

Rates on Continental European Markets Advance Again—Sterling Declines Fractionally.

In yesterday's foreign exchange market the advance of rates on Continental European countries continued. The French exchange had at one time risen nearly ¼ cent per franc over Friday's close; Belgium closed yesterday at a similar advance, and the rate on Denmark and Norway was up nearly ¼ cent per krone. Much attention was attracted by the advance in Austrian exchange to .26, as against .22½ on Friday and .20 at the close of the preceding week. Wall Street exchange brokers explained this movement by the existence of orders for considerable amounts for Austrian crowns from foreign sources.

Sterling was lower, opening ¼ cent below Friday, and declining ⅝ from the opening price. The rate on Argentina was unchanged from Friday. Brazilian exchange declined from 15 to 14½ cents per milreis. Exchange on Montreal was unchanged from Friday.

DEMONETIZING SILVER.

Action of European Countries on Their Currencies.

Virtual demonetization of silver in countries of Continental Europe has become a somewhat striking incident of the day. A London review of the silver market states that "information has been received from Berne that the Swiss Federal Council has decided to carry out between now and the end of April the withdrawal from circulation in Switzerland of all 5-franc pieces of other States members of the Latin Union. The Council has also decided to withdraw within the same period all the smaller Belgian silver coins in the same manner as was done last year in the case of Italian and French currency."

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

The Outlook.

Careful consideration is being accorded in the financial district to any signs which may point the ultimate way of things as to business. But those who seek a reliable index are not meeting with a high degree of success, so conflicting are the forces governing the situation. For the moment it is generally admitted there has been some improvement in certain avenues of trade, but there is nothing like conviction that the tendency of the present is a definite trend. This element of doubt has naturally found reflection in the opinions of those who follow the stock market. Absence of public buying and a reactionary turn to the price scale during the last several days are not reassuring factors, and caution is once more becoming a watchword in any expression of opinion as to the market. Yesterday's display was looked upon as purely professional, as an endeavor to gain a bit on the short side.

Substantial Declines.

While no sharp break has taken place in the stock market recently it nevertheless is true that prices for the most part have been settling back until declines of fairly large proportions are recorded, as compared with the higher levels early in the month. In some issues this decline has run as large as 6 to 7 points. In short, lack of sustained buying power has been rather more severely felt than the casual day to day scanning of the stock market would appear to indicate.

Paucity of Bills.

According to dealers in foreign exchange there has been a marked paucity of bills these last few days, while at the same time there has been a brisk demand both from commercial and speculative interests. One reason for this rather sudden scarcity of bills, the dealers say, is the large short interest. People, in other words, just sold contracts short, and now that they are trying to cover, the supply almost disappears, because now they have to bid for real bills and nobody is selling new contracts. Further, the cables say that the supply of dollars in London is increasing steadily.

The French Advance.

French francs yesterday got up to 6.96, the highest point touched since Sept. 18 last, which was the time they were at or above 7 cents each. Here again the supply of franc bills is very limited, according to the dealers, while shorts are bidding aggressively for what they require. With regard to francs, it is the general belief that political discussions in Paris can be pretty much ignored, and that the chief factor to be considered now is the extreme probability that France will be able to borrow enough here to take care of her more pressing requirements for 1921. If the French get $100,000,000, as everybody expects they will, a lot of their exchange problems of the moment will be solved.

The Argentine Loan.

Cabled advices from the Argentine say that the Government of that country has refused a proffered loan from American bankers of $200,000,000 because the rate suggested was 8 per cent., entirely too high, in the opinion of Argentine officials. Bankers here were inclined to make light of the cable. One of them said he was willing to bet the Argentine would not pay 8 per cent. for $200,000,000 for the simple reason that no one would be insane enough to attempt to float any such loan for that country. Incidentally, attention was called to the current offering of Belgian bonds at 8 per cent. and to the French $100,000,000 loan of last September, which also was at 8 per cent.

A Disappointing Showing.

The actual net railway operating income of the railroads of the United States in the four months since higher rates went into effect, with December partly estimated, according to figures which have been compiled by the Bureau of Railway Economics, is a considerable disappointment. The amount of net which should have been earned in the last four months of 1920 to yield 6 per cent. on the aggregate value of railroad property, as established by the Interstate Commerce Commission, was $407,000,000. The actual net operating income with December totals based on incomplete returns amounted to only $291,000,000, a deficit of $116,000,000. The last complete returns available show that in November actual net was $60,000,000, or $39,000,000 short of the amount needed to yield the 6 per cent. called for in the Transportation act. December's deficit, under the amount needed for 6 per cent. on aggregate property value, is estimated at $17,000,000. At first glance this would indicate that there has been a material improvement over November, but it must be remembered that each month in the year does not require one-twelfth of the total. Railroad earnings fluctuate from month to month dependent on traffic movement, and the apparent improvement in December over the preceding month is somewhat explained when it is stated that the amounts necessary in the last four 1920 months to yield the prescribed 6 per cent. were $109,000,000 in September, $112,000,000 in October, $99,000,000 in November and $87,000,000 in December.

Canadian Traffic Decline.

Figures recently obtained show plainly that Canada has not been exempt from a decline in traffic over her railroads. In the first week in December, 1920, the increase in traffic on the Canadian Pacific over the corresponding week of the preceding year was 37.3 per cent.; in the second week 31.6 per cent.; in the third 20.7 per cent., and in the fourth 2.53 per cent. In the first week in January it was 4.16 per cent. more than in the corresponding period a year ago, but in the second week in this month it showed a decline of 1.45 per cent. over the second week in the same month last year. This is taken in railroad circles as an example of conditions on other Canadian lines.

GERMAN PRICES IN 1920.

Course of Commodity Markets Shows by Monthly Averages.

The Frankfurter Zeitung, which publishes an index number of German commodity prices, made up from the monthly average of sixty-seven separate articles at Frankfurt, gives the following computation after taking the average at the beginning of last January as 100:

1920.	Food.	Textiles.	Minerals.	Misc.	T't'l.
January (base)	100	100	100	100	100
February	117	154	143	128	131
March	130	193	163	144	147
April	133	161	157	144	146
May	133	116	153	138	142
June	153	116	116	214	149
July	152	96	113	214	144
August	153	107	114	213	146
September	132	111	118	249	144
October	143	111	125	303	149
November	149	111	119	303	152
December	153	133	118	303	156

This table shows that the reaction between May and September, which affected the whole world, affected Germany also, but did not continue in that country.

CANADA

An authority estimates that Canadian exports for 1920 exceeded all previous records by $40,000,000.

These figures, coupled with the report that bank deposits in the Dominion are showing remarkable increases, are indications of the stability of Canadian Securities.

We have made a special study of Canadian Investments and will be pleased to make recommendations of issues which we think are attractive.

Inquiries are cordially invited.

MANY CHANGES SOON IN RAILROAD BOARDS

To Be Caused by Clayton Act's Provisions Regarding Interlocking Directorates.

DEPLORED BY OFFICIALS

Regulations for Carriers Asking Bids Confuse an Unsatisfactory Condition, Railroad Men Say.

A great many changes in the personnel of railroad corporation directorates are expected to take place within the next few months in compliance with the provisions of Section 10 of the Clayton act, which went into effect Jan. 1. Already there have been resignations from such companies as the Pennsylvania, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Lehigh Valley Coal Company of such men as A. W. Mellon of Pittsburgh, John D. Ryan and E. E. Loomis, respectively, and it is felt that the withdrawal of these and others yet to come from other companies will work to the great disadvantage of all the concerns. In regard to interlocking railroad directorates Section 10 of the Clayton act reads:

"That after two years from the approval of this act no common carrier engaged in commerce shall have any dealings in securities, supplies or other articles of commerce, of any kind, to the amount of more than $50,000 in the aggregate, in any one year, with another corporation, firm, partnership or association when the said common carrier shall have upon its Board of Directors or as its President, Manager, or selling officer or agent in the particular transaction, any person who is at the same time a Director, manager or purchasing or selling officer of, or who has any substantial interest in, such other corporation, firm, partnership or association unless and except such purchases shall be made from, or such dealings shall be with, the bidder whose bid is most favorable to such common carrier, to be ascertained by competitive bidding under regulations to be prescribed by rule or otherwise by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No bid shall be received unless the name and address of the bidder or the names and addresses of the officers, Directors and general managers, thereof, if the bidder be a corporation, or the members, if it be a partnership or firm, be given with the bid."

Regulations issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission in October, 1919, governing the method of obtaining competitive bids on transactions covered by the Clayton act, require that when a carrier calls for bids for securities, supplies or other articles of commerce, or for the construction or maintenance of any kind or part of its carrier property, such carrier shall prepare specifications in minute detail and provide maps, drawings and illustrations necessary to a full understanding of the premises and procedure by bidders. These shall be kept on public exhibition and copies furnished to persons desiring to bid. Publication of requests for bids in certain newspapers also is required. These notices must also be displayed on bulletin boards.

FRENCH LOAN AND CURRENCY

The Government's Plan for Its Bank Indebtedness.

A correspondent of The London Economist writing from Paris states that the new French loan, so far as can be ascertained, has produced between seven and eight thousand million francs of new money. This, it is added, would be more than sufficient to enable the Government to pay back the 2,600,000,000 francs advanced by the Bank of France to the State, which would help toward reducing the inflated currency.

But in view of the heavy demands on the Treasury, it is considered impossible that so large a part of the proceeds of the loan will be used to pay off advances of the bank. A new agreement has therefore been entered into, under which the Government agrees to pay off its obligation of 2,600,000,000 francs by annual instalments, beginning next January with 2,000,000,000 francs, the rest to be paid at another annual date.

FALL IN LONDON PRICES.

Course of Average Stock Exchange Values During 1920.

The London Bankers' Magazine publishes a compilation of the aggregate value of typical securities on the London Stock Exchange. Reduced to a percentage basis, it now makes the following interesting comparison: Taking the Stock Exchange valuations of January, 1907, as 100, the valuation of July, 1914, was 88; in April, 1918, it was 67; in November, 1918, it was 74; in November, 1919, it had fallen to 69, and in December of 1920 averaged 60.

During the last year it states that on the average British Government securities, excluding the war loans, declined about 12 per cent., municipal stocks about 20 per cent., foreign Government securities 19 per cent., and English railways about 17 per cent., while in the purely speculative portions of the market there was a decline ranging from 23 per cent. to a maximum of 39 per cent. in mining shares.

COPENHAGEN LOAN NOW UNDER WAY

To Be Less Than $15,000,000—Rise in Danish Exchange Rate Yesterday.

Reports from abroad to the effect that the National City Company has offered to float a loan of $15,000,000 for the City of Copenhagen, it was learned yesterday, are correct only to the extent that Vice President George K. Weeks, of the National City Company, is now in Copenhagen carrying on negotiations for financing of some kind. It was said that an official announcement concerning Mr. Weeks's efforts probably would be forthcoming tomorrow.

The City of Copenhagen is to figure in the transaction only incidentally. No information could be gained here as to what the amount of the loan will be, what its terms and conditions will amount to, nor the rate of interest the loan will carry. The impression was that the amount would be somewhat less than the $15,000,000 figure mentioned in the foreign dispatches.

The City of Copenhagen floated a loan here of $15,000,000 on July 1, 1919. That offering was of 5½ per cent. bonds of a maturity of twenty-five years. That was the last municipal financing for Denmark undertaken in this country. The Government of Denmark, however, floated a loan of $25,000,000 in twenty-five year 8 per cent. bonds in this market on Oct. 15 last.

Danish exchange has been sensationally strong in recent weeks, starting from an extreme low of 13 cents to the Danish crown on Nov. 12 of last year, rising to 17.60 recently and adding 200 points more during the last week. Yesterday's quotation was 19.60, the highest rate reached since early in December, 1919.

COURSE OF DEFLATION.

A London Discussion of How It Began in England.

"It would be difficult," The London Statist remarks in its review of 1920, "to say when deflation definitely began, but at all events its first tangible results appeared in May, when the general level of wholesale prices suffered a decline for the first time for over twelve months. About that time, too, banking loans for speculative purposes were being considerably restricted. In his budget speech in April the Chancellor left no doubt as to his determination to bring about some measure of deflation, when he made provision for a reduction of the floating debt by £70,000,000, and a total debt reduction of over £234,000,000 during the financial year.

"There were two outstanding events also which foreshadowed the general trend of developments: the first was the fixing of the fiduciary issue of currency notes for 1920 at £320,600,000, and the second was the raising of the bank rate from 6 per cent. to 7 per cent. on April 15."

ATTACKS RAILROAD LABOR AGREEMENTS

Compacts Made During Federal Control Rotten "and Indefensible," Says Railway Age.

UNJUST PAYMENTS CITED

Charges That Millions of "Honest Graft" Were Extorted for Work Never Done.

That the national agreements between the Railroad Administration and railroad labor which were made during Federal control are the "most rotten and indefensible agreements ever entered into by any employers and employes" is the assertion in the current issue of The Railway Age. The charge is based on evidence submitted to the Railroad Labor Board in Chicago. The Age says:

"They were made by the Director General and certain labor unions under Government control. Mr. Whiter is cramming the record of the proceedings with cases of employes who, under the agreements and the interpretations of them made by the Railroad Administration's National Boards of Adjustment, have got large amounts of money for which they never did any work, or have got several times as much money as was justified by the work they did. The fact that leaders of the labor brotherhoods are seeking to have perpetuated these robber agreements and the many millions of 'honest graft' extorted under them should be sufficient evidence to the public of the sincerity and public spirit which caused them to open the hearings before the Labor Board with wholesale charges of waste and peculation against the management of the railways.

"In his sworn testimony Mr. Whiter has shown that the Pere Marquette Railway was compelled to pay $9,364 in back pay to four employes because their titles under these agreements were changed by a decision of the Director General. A car repairer on the Virginian Railway was paid $1,000 for work he never did. He was laid off with other employes because there was no work for him to do. When he became entitled under his 'seniority rights' to be re-employed the road refused to take him back because his eyesight was defective. The road was compelled to pay him from the time his 'seniority rights' would have entitled him to re-employment because he had not been told his eyesight was bad when it laid him off!"

Some of the other instances quoted by the Age follow:

"A train on the El Paso & Southwestern was delayed one hour and thirty minutes and an employe was paid five hours' time for making repairs to a window which took thirty minutes, when a foreman who was present could have done the work without delaying the train.

"A machinist on the Santa Fé for 77 days performed the duties of a night roundhouse foreman while the foreman was sick. The foreman's pay for this time would have been $665, but the machinist for substituting for him received $921.

"Four car men on the same road were sent out on the line to do a piece of work that took 4 hours and 33 minutes. The company was compelled to pay these men for 112 hours' work.

"Five machinists on the Norfolk & Western were sent to an outlying point, where they actually worked eight hours per day for three days. Each of them had to be paid straight time for the 24 hours they did work and time and a half for 72 hours they didn't work.

"The Shop Crafts Agreement provides that when employes are required to check in and out on their own time they will be paid for one hour extra at the close of each week, no matter how few hours they may have worked. This rule in the first six months of 1920 cost the Western roads $2,730,166, the Eastern roads $2,913,548, and the Southern roads $801,944, a total of $6,445,658 for work which never was done. In an entire year the amount paid under it for work not done would be $14,500,000. And this is but one of the 182 rules in the Shop Crafts Agreement!"

ENGLAND'S TRADE IN GOLD.

Where She Sent It and Whence She Imported It Last Year.

Complete returns of the export and import of gold coin and bullion in England during 1920 show that the largest imports of the year were £38,661,000 from South Africa; the second largest £6,711,000 from France; third, £1,443,000 from Russia; fourth, £977,000 from West Africa; fifth, £894,000 from Sweden. In addition, £851,000 came from New Zealand and £201,000 from Holland.

By far the largest exports were made to the United States, to which country England sent last year £52,674,000. The second largest total shipment of the year was £23,630,000 to India, the third largest £5,735,000 to South America. The Straits Settlements took £3,727,000 and South Africa, in the form of minted coin, £3,610,000. Amounts in the neighborhood of £750,000 each were sent to Egypt and to Switzerland.

STOCK DIVIDEND PLANNED.

Pressed Steel Car Directors Recommend Declaration of 20 Per Cent.

The Directors of the Pressed Steel Car Company have recommended the declaration of a stock dividend of 20 per cent. on the common stock. It is also proposed to increase the authorized common stock from $12,500,000 to $50,000,000 and to exchange the outstanding preferred stock for common stock. The proposals will come before a meeting of the stockholders which will be held Feb. 16.

By means of the conversion of the preferred stock into common stock the preferred stockholders can participate in the stock dividend. Should all of the preferred be exchanged for common, the outstanding capital of the company, after the payment of the stock dividend, would be $30,000,000, and $20,000,000 would remain in the treasury to be used for such corporate purposes as might arise in the future.

In a letter to stockholders F. N. Hoffstot, President of the company, says in part:

"Since the preferred stock is non-cumulative, your Directors believe that it will be to the advantage of the preferred shareholder to make the exchange and thereby secure an unrestricted share in all of the properties and accumulated profits of the company, which have been very much increased during recent years. Your Directors also believe that the common stockholder is justified in extending this privilege to the preferred stockholders, so as to eliminate the non-cumulative annual preferred dividend to which the preferred stock is now entitled.

"If the stockholders authorize this plan of recapitalization, the time for its consummation will be determined by the Board of Directors after the annual meeting."

The Barcelona Failure.

The recent bank suspension at Barcelona is described by the London financial press as being due to losses in exchange operations and to difficulty in calling in loans because of the fall in commodity prices. It is stated that the Spanish Government has taken action to prevent the bank's total failure, which had relieved the situation.

FAVORABLE POSITION OF THE OIL INDUSTRY

From THE NEW YORK TIMES, January 21, 1921

"Keen attention is being paid to the oil issues, probably because it was this class of stocks which led the upturn that ultimately developed into the bull market of 1919. * * * There is one significant fact with relation to the oil industry—that it has weathered the period of readjustment with less discomfort than almost any other. Comparing present oil prices with the high for all time, and once again comparing with the low of not so long ago, it will be seen that quotations are almost at the peak, and that the level is well beyond that which prevailed immediately following the close of the war."

Regardless of temporary fluctuations in demand due to seasonable conditions, all authorities, including the U. S. Geological Survey, agree that the oil resources of this country are being gradually depleted in the face of an increasing demand.

GRAIN PRICES HIGHER

Persistent Export Demand Surprises Wheat Trade—Large Arrivals From Farms.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 22.—Week-end profit-taking in wheat and buying by holders of weekly bids in corn and oats furnished the bulk of the support in the grain market today. Prices averaged higher and closed firm with net gains of 3 to 3¾ cents on wheat, ⅝ cent on corn and ½ cent on oats. Rye was up ⅝@1¼ cents and barley 1½ cents.

Less was heard in the early market regarding the export demand for wheat, but late in the day the Seaboard reported around 1,250,000 bushels of wheat sold abroad, with premiums at the Gulf practically unchanged. There were 20,000 barrels of flour sold by a Canadian mill to a Continental Government. Country offerings as a whole are not large and are readily absorbed.

The liquidation of grain by the leading speculative holders continues and there was plenty for sale on all hard spots, which prevented any material advance. It is generally believed that there is still considerable of this grain to come out, although the movement may be completed by the middle of next week, provided the market is able to absorb it. The persistent export demand for domestic wheat is one of the most surprising features of a decidedly complex situation. Seemingly as soon as one country completes its buying another one enters the market, and in some quarters it is regarded as probable that the United States will oversell before the trade knows it.

Sales as lately reported have been exceeding the total clearances of domestic and Manitoba grain. There is also commencing to be a little apprehension as to the new wheat crop. Reports from Oklahoma indicate green bugs and Hessian flies, and there is more or less of the latter pest evidence in all of the soft Winter wheat States, the mild weather being a factor. It is as yet much too early, however, to talk damage.

One of the most striking effects of the heavy selling of grains by farmers of late was shown in the Chicago Federal Reserve Bank statement, the ratio of total reserves to net deposits and Federal trade note liabilities combined being 47 per cent., against 45.1 per cent. last week. While wet weather makes country roads impassable, no material falling off in the movement to terminal markets is expected next week. There was a rumor in circulation late in the day that some bullish news was to come from Argentina, but it failed to develop, and wheat there closed 4 cents lower.

Primary arrivals of wheat for the week aggregated 7,787,000 bushels, compared with 7,004,000 bushels the previous week and 5,075,000 bushels last year. Shipments were 5,012,000 bushels, against 3,922,000 bushels the previous week and 4,714,000 bushels last year. The run of corn was the largest at this season in over five years, being 10,665,000 bushels, against 8,222,000 bushels the previous week and 5,244,000 bushels last year. Shipments were 5,071,000 bushels; last week they were 4,111,000 bushels, last year 3,211,000.

Today's Chicago prices for the principal commodities were as follows:

South Dakota Bank Closed.

MITCHELL, S. D., Jan. 22.—The Corn Belt National Bank at Scotland, S. D., was closed today by a Federal bank examiner. The bank's deposits approximate $200,000, it was said. The capital is $25,000. The cause of the bank's difficulties was not announced. The bank was the second in Scotland to close in the last six months.

China and Silver Bullion.

Commenting on the state of the silver market, one large London bullion house observes that "it is remarkable that silver continues to be shipped to China, notwithstanding the large amounts in stock and on the way. If some day or other China should have a fit of indigestion, it could obtain relief in only one way."

COMMODITY PRICES.

Narrow Movement of Prices in Week's Final Session—Some Grains Higher.

There was very little in the way of an active price movement in yesterday's wholesale markets, as on previous days. In the grains wheat advancing 4 cents, and corn ¼ of a cent, per bushel. Oats and flour were unchanged. In the groceries, coffee and sugar were unchanged, with butter down 1 cent per pound, and eggs unchanged. In the provisions, lard was 10 cents per pound higher, pork and beef showed no change.

No changes were recorded in the metals, and in the textiles spot cotton declined 50 cents per hundred pounds, with printcloths unchanged.

Following are the cash prices for the principal commodities in the wholesale market at the close of business Saturday, a week before, and a year ago:

London Stock Exchange Seats.

By way of illustrating the change in the condition of business on the Stock Exchanges as compared with a year ago, the London Economist remarks that at the beginning of 1920 the price of a nomination to Stock Exchange membership was about £450. Early in the past year it rose to £650, at which it is stated that at least one seat is known to have changed hands. A fortnight ago, however, a sale was made for £60, and the price at the opening of 1921 is stated nominally as £50 bid, £100 asked.

COTTON WINDS UP A WEEK OF DECLINE

January Pool, Which Has Collapsed, Responsible for the Fall in Price.

The cotton market continued its week-long decline during the first hour of yesterday's short session, and at the end of that time it was down 50 points for January and 35 to 40 points for the rest of the list. Local speculative houses sold a considerable amount in the early trading, and the South and some of the foreign people also sold through the list. The principal liquidation, though, was in January, where the bull crowd, which had been running up the price in an attempt to squeeze the shorts, was trying to get out.

This January pool, which has now collapsed, seems to have played a very important part in the week's decline. The heavy arrivals from the South apparently broke the corner, such as it was, and for the last two or three days the January longs have either been getting out altogether or have been hedging into March and May. That there has not been such a tremendous amount of hedging, however, would appear to be the case, because of the fact that the premium on January over March and May yesterday was virtually what it was at the beginning of the week, notwithstanding that all three options were down about 200 points on the period.

Most of yesterday's losses were suffered in the first hour. After that time the market rallied a little, lifting 5 to 15 points from the extreme lows. This was due to the usual week-end covering and evening-up, but the market closed heavy and without any snap.

The following shows the statistical position of cotton figured by The Financial Chronicle:

MEXICO ACTS ON RAILROADS.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 22.—Details relative to the proposed return of Mexican railways to private ownership will be studied by a commission appointed yesterday by Pascual Ortiz Rubio, Minister of Public Works.

This commission will proceed to New York City immediately and will attempt to arrive at a basis upon which the operation may be carried out.

It will report here as soon as possible.

Europe and Our Market.

"It would seem," so remarks a London financial critic, "that unless we are able to find a market for our goods in the United States, an indefinite period must elapse before Europe in general, and this country in particular, will be in a position to liquidate their heavy indebtedness to that country."

The Merchant's Point of View

IN a way, the past week witnessed a trying out of the markets and the ushering in of business for the year. The city was crowded with buyers, both wholesalers and retailers. An unmistakable demand for goods for quick delivery was in evidence and, in some instances, buyers, after sounding out original sources of supply, felt obliged to advertise in order to secure what they want, at the prices they are willing to pay, from second hands. There seemed to be a significance in the fact that it was "thrift week." What appeared to astonish some of the buyers who had come here prepared to find a surplus of bargains was that there were few if any that obtruded themselves. There had been, it is true, a series of reductions in prices, mostly affecting textile fabrics and allied lines, but these had apparently reached the "irreducible-minimum" stage beyond which concessions could not be had. A disposition was shown, rather, to advance prices in cases where any special eagerness to obtain certain goods was evident. In explanation it was stated that prices had been made lower than the cost of production warranted simply to keep mills active and to ascertain how cheap goods must be in order to create a demand for them. It is noteworthy, also, that the mills showed no disposition to adhere to the bottom prices for deliveries much in the future, confining their offerings to this month and next. Beyond that period they will be governed by circumstances.

Advance in Prices Frowned On. A notion that is entertained by many sellers is that, if they can once create a market, it will be easy to advance prices. The best evidence is that those who hold this view are doomed to disappointment should they try to put this theory in practice. This much was evident from the actions of the buyers here last week, who showed signs of balking whenever an attempt was made to raise prices, and many of whom restricted their orders in consequence. At the meeting of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association any movement to secure higher prices was distinctly disapproved, and it is likely to meet with concerted resistance. Neither the jobber nor the retailer buys goods to keep them as souvenirs, and both are aware that the public will not stand for higher prices. Dealers want only such goods as they can sell, and they realize that the consumer is neither in the position nor mood to be extravagant. It is going to take coaxing to make people buy, for a while, and the strongest appeal that can be made to them is that based on cheapness. They are aware that the cost of both raw materials and labor has come down and that, consequently, the finished products should show a corresponding reduction. It takes the change of only a small percentage of the sales total of the country to make for prosperous business or the reverse. It is, therefore, not necessary for many to check their buying in order to make hard times. Before the war the normal internal commerce of this country was figured at about $50,000,000,000 a year. Today, with the higher values prevalent, it must be about double that. A drop of only 1 per cent. would represent $1,000,000,000, which is a pretty big sum to consider. It is more than one-eighth the value of all the exports.

Situation in Raw Fur Trade. Just now, from more than one angle, the fur business is claiming considerable attention. Not the least of this is on the part of banking and other lending concerns which have much money tied up in loans on the raw material. During the period of extravagance there was a great run on furs. The market kept advancing constantly, despite the fact that the high prices induced greater industry by the trappers and, consequently, enormous supplies. When the halt came, about the first industry to be hit was that of furs, and the failures in the trade were most marked. The smaller speculators were the first to suffer, but they were followed by quite a number of the more responsible firms. The cessation in demand and the drop in values were so pronounced that the big auctions in this city, St. Louis and elsewhere had to be postponed lest holdings be sacrificed. Quite a number, also, of those who had bought at the auction sales and had deposited twenty-five per cent. of the purchase price were placed in a dilemma. The goods had depreciated more than the amount of their deposits, and they were sure of a greater loss if they completed the purchases than if they forfeited the deposit money. This holds true especially of several hundred concerns whose bids had been accepted at the last St. Louis auction sale. There are also a lot of consignors of furs who borrowed on their consignments up to 75 or 80 per cent. of the former market values and who will be called upon to make good the difference between these sums and what the furs will now fetch at auction. It may bankrupt quite a number if they are forced to do this. The auction company has announced a sale for Feb. 7 at which will be offered, among other things, the furs which have not been paid for, and efforts are being made to compromise matters in some way. Meanwhile, the auction of raw furs in this city during the past week showed very steep reductions in prices, indicating that these are at permanently lower levels.

British After Foreign Business. Reference has hitherto been made to the fact that the British are making more use of their Consular service in retaining and extending foreign trade. But the method they employ is quite different from that in vogue here. They have borrowed in some respects from what has been the usage of the Bureau of Local and Domestic Commerce, but they have added to this certain features of the German system. The plan owes its inception to steps taken while the war was in progress. Then Admiral Campbell of the Foreign Trade Department of the Foreign Office devised what was called "Form K," containing inquiries which Consular and other trade officers were to answer. These inquiries related to specific firms within the respective territories of the trade officers, and the answers were sent to Great Britain, where copies were distributed to the members of the various Chambers of Commerce. The information so conveyed purported to show the actual requirements of firms engaged in business in the different foreign countries from which the reports came. Originally, the firms were reported on under twenty wide trade headings. This resulted in traders getting a large number of reports relating to commodities in which they were not interested. Then the Chambers of Commerce got busy and had a conference with the authorities, which resulted in a revision of the classification so that traders are now to get only such reports as are of value to them. When the system is in full operation, exporters will know exactly to whom to send their catalogues and offers, instead of scattering these broadcast in the hope of finding a buyer.

Details of the Plan Employed. In the form which Consular officers are to fill out are six inquiries. These are, respectively: The name of the firm; general nature of its business and its capital where possible; principal goods required; name of firm's agent in the United Kingdom; language in which correspondence should be carried on; and "remarks." At the outset, reports will be made only on concerns doing business in a large way, including wholesale importing firms, manufacturers importing on their own account, department stores and any municipal or other organization importing on a large scale articles necessary for prosecuting its activities. Afterward, to these will be added other concerns, large and small, which import regularly and whose financial position is sound. In course of time many thousand firms would be thus reported on. The reports are numbered serially, and any supplementary report on the same firm will be given the same number as the original, with the addition of the words "revised" or "additional." Provision is made that those receiving the reports do not pass them on to their own agents abroad or to firms or individuals who are not approved. This system does not go quite so far as the German one, which called for reports telling of the personal peculiarities and hobbies of customers abroad and giving hints as to how the latter could be reached through their vanities and other weaknesses. But, when it has been in operation for some time, it will afford British exporters valuable specific information on which to proceed and will supplement the reports on general trade conditions in the various foreign countries.

Cotton Quotations and Finished Fabrics. What occurred during the last week in the cotton markets only emphasized the fact that the low point in prices has been passed and that the upward turn is a permanency. Fluctuations will, of course, occur in the exchanges as speculators contend against one another, but the prices for spot cotton will not go back again to anything near where they were only a short time ago. For one thing, the demand for the article is beginning to show an increase which will be more marked as the season advances and the mills operate more freely. Export needs, also, which have been checked by lowered rates of exchange, will come more to the fore before many months as the exchange position becomes more favorable. Use is being found likewise for the lower grades of cotton, which until recently were well nigh unsalable. It is quite likely that, under these circumstances, there will be less inclination to follow the suggestion of restricting the new year's crop acreage by one-half. In connection with the last-named matter, the suggestion has been advanced by Sir Charles Macara, the British cotton expert, that the different Governments interested should buy all surplus cotton and store it until required, so that enough shall always be available.

More life has been shown in the goods market since the announcement of the recent revisions of prices. Demand has been keener and a number of finished goods have been placed at value. Fabrics in the gray have partaken of the strength displayed and are being held at higher prices. Mills are gradually increasing their output, even though the profits realized are not as great as were expected. There has been some buying of Spring knit goods. Fall buying will begin about March 15. More activity in yarns is reported, while hosiery sales are showing a decided improvement.

Wool, Woolens and Clothing. In wool the situation still remains rather mixed. The auction sales in London of Government-owned stocks have not been successful, mainly because the upset prices are regarded as too high. The free wool sales at the same place have shown somewhat better results, although the prices obtained have been lower. In future Government sales the reserve limits will be lowered to correspond with the prices obtained at the sales of free wool. In Australia sales will be had on Feb. 2 and 11 at Perth and Adelaide respectively, about 10,000 bales to be offered at each. It is notable that a better demand exists for the lower grades of wool, which seem to be in a way of coming to their own after a few years of neglect. In this country an auction sale of Government-owned wool will be held at Boston on Feb. 3, when about 4,000,000 pounds will be offered. The assortment is mainly of low grade stock.

In the goods market, features during the last week were the repricings on dress goods and men's suitings to lower levels. Attached to the offerings is a guarantee protecting purchasers in case lower figures are named in the openings for Fall. The tendency should be to stimulate purchases. Sales for Spring are somewhat spotty, with a better call for dress goods than for men's wear fabrics. While the clothing trade is still wrestling with its labor problem, this is not preventing the manufacture of enough garments to take care of all the trade that is offered. Among the retailers cut-rate sales continue in evidence and several manufacturers, in order to get rid of their surpluses, are selling at retail in competition.

FOR OWNER'S MANAGEMENT.

It Cuts Quite a Figure in Making a Success in Some Cases.

It is ownership management that has so materially helped the growth of specialty stores, according to a representative in that field, and to accomplish better results the large department stores, he said, could afford to do some copying of this feature. He pointed out how the specialty store's relations with customers, as well as those among its employes, are helped when the owner is always accessible and is in constant touch with happenings inside and outside of the establishment.

"How important a part ownership management plays in all phases of business," he said, "was particularly brought to my mind during a recent visit to a nearby resort. A hotel there has been in the hands of one family for a number of years and is actively managed by them. It was turning guests away. Another large hotel at the same place is run by a corporation and the manager usually lasts in his position about a month. The hotel accommodates over five hundred. At the time of my visit it had exactly fifty guests.

"In a store managed by its owners and not managed from a mahogany enclosed office with a guard of secretary, under secretary, head office manager, his assistants and an office boy, the customer always feels more at home. The owner can be reached when necessary and the salespeople are much more apt to be on the job for that reason. The buyer or department head for the same reason has small chance of conducting a private feud or venting his private grievances on those under him.

"In a merchandising way, too, the owner's knowledge of market conditions keeps his buyers keyed up to their best pitch. The owner talks from knowledge and not from what his people tell him. He does not have to study sales figures and other cold data in order to gather his ideas of what the store is doing or is prepared to do. He knows the story behind the figures without having to guess at it, and his power and the growth of specialty stores rest just in that."

RAW SILK MARKETS.

More Activity Attended With Advancing Prices in All of Them.

The Yokohama raw silk market continued active during the past week, with most of the buying for American account at practically unchanged prices. Visible stock there is decreasing, according to cables received by A. P. Villa & Brothers, Inc., owing to large buying for home consumption as well as the shut-down of the reeling plants. The better grades of silks, such as double extras, have been bought rather freely and are getting very scarce.

In the Canton market prices are rising almost daily, due to a very large demand from this country. The market has advanced about $1 a pound in the last two weeks, and a further increase is looked for. Shanghai reports a good demand for steam filatures and tsatlees. Reelers there are asking higher prices and are limiting their offerings to small lots in anticipation of a still better market. Buyers seem very eager to operate at Shanghai, because there prices compare most favorably with those asked in Japan.

Prices in Italian silks are stiffening at Milan in view of the increasing business being done there for both American and European account. In the local market business is expanding considerably, and would be more active still were it not for the fact that certain grades of silks are very scarce. Japanese silks and new style Canton reelings are almost unobtainable, and it is feared that a marked scarcity of them will exist during February.

SILKS AND SILK DRESSES.

Makers of the Two Arrange for a Mutual Understanding.

Closer relationship between the broad silk industry and the dress manufacturers is expected to result soon, following a meeting of leaders in both industries at the headquarters of the Associated Dress Industries of America in the Annex Hotel. Tentative plans were laid whereby production and distribution may be brought to a high point of efficiency. David A. Mosessohn, Executive Director of the association, presided.

Charles Cheney of Cheney Brothers heartily commended the aims of the movement, which include the important features of fabric forecasts, settling of grievances and the issuance of market letters. Joseph Berlinger of the J. Berlinger Company is Chairman of the Market Letter Committee. A committee was appointed at the meeting to confer with one from the United Waist League of America and study the contract agreement recently prepared by the Silk Association of America.

The Silk Council of the Associated Dress Industries of America, as the group of fabric men at the meeting is called, is headed by J. W. Morrison of the Susquehanna Silk Mills. Harry Levy of the Luvan Silk Company is Vice Chairman. Samuel Blondheim of Schwarzenbach, Huber & Co. is Chairman of the Membership Committee.

TO FIX TEA STANDARDS.

Board to Meet at the Appraisers' Stores Here Tomorrow.

A tea party quite different from that held in Boston back in the latter part of the eighteenth century will be held in this city tomorrow, beginning at 10 A. M. Its purpose will be to determine the standards of purity, quality and fitness of all teas to enter this country from abroad during the year beginning May 1, the recommendations of the "guests" being forwarded to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval.

The "party" will be given at the United States Appraisers' Stores, 641 Washington Street. The tea trade is urged to send samples of available teas to the Chairman of the United States Board of Tea Experts, at that address, Room 811, in time for them to be passed upon. The Board of Tea Experts, which was selected by the Secretary of Agriculture, is made up of J. J. McNamara, New York City; H. G. Woodworth, Boston; Arthur T. Hellyer, Chicago; C. E. Wyman, St. Paul; E. R. Rogers, Tacoma; G. W. Caswell, San Francisco, and G. F. Mitchell, Supervising Tea Examiner, Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture.

EMPLOYES HOLDING THE WRONG JOBS

One Remedy Suggested Is That They Be Taken On for a Probationary Period.

Store morale is considered an important thing at all times by retail executives, but particularly now when the service extended to querulous customers takes second place, and scarcely that, to the merchandise values offered. The effort to induce more efficient salesmanship has resulted in the adoption of a number of different plans designed to increase the interest of the store person in his or her work. The need of improved service was especially emphasized following the post-holiday reorganizations in the stores, when the inefficient were dismissed. But, in spite of commission and bonus plans, salesmanship lectures and the weeding out of the inefficient, store executives feel there is still considerable improvement to be made in the matter of morale and service. And one of the most important factors in the task of effecting this improvement, it is felt, is having the right person in the right job, from the executive himself down to the bundle wrapper.

The misplacement of men is, of course, more peculiarly the problem of large store organizations, where mistakes of the kind are more apt to go unnoticed than in a small establishment. Where the mistake involves wrong judgment in the placing of a higher executive, the results which follow are just so much more likely to be harmful. For one thing, it is explained that a man occupying such a position is not easy to move around once he has been given his place, and for another, his influence is wider and is liable to affect a large number of subordinates. Such an instance is to be found in the case of a large retail establishment of wide reputation for the ability of its owners. According to those with an intimate knowledge of the store's affairs, one partner is especially suited to the management of personnel. His dealings with employes are on a basis that commands their respect and co-operation. Every department under his direction reflects this spirit in notable comparison with other sections of the store. Yet his specific duty, and the one taking most of his time and thought, is the financial business of the firm. The other partner has direct supervision of the personnel. His qualifications, on the contrary, fit him ideally, it is said, for the financial end of the business. He thinks in terms of business details and the abstract problems of the store, and cannot get beyond this method of thought in his dealings with employes. A reversing of the two positions in this case might well lead to greatly improved service.

The example furnished by the experience of one store department is another which indicates, not the friction which may develop between members of the store's personnel, perhaps the most frequent cause of trouble, but the reaction of a department head to a special type of customer. This was an infants' and children's wear department, and from a merchandising standpoint, seemed to be very capably handled by the woman in charge. The right kind of goods was being bought and the prices by comparison with those of other stores seemed correct, and yet the department was not making headway. For some reason that the merchandise manager and others sought long in vain to discover, the business of this section was not coming along as it should. It was only by chance that the answer was found. In the hearing of one of the executives, following the departure of a customer with a child, the woman buyer was heard to say, "I'm glad that little brat is out of here. I hate them."

A few diplomatic questions disclosed the fact that the woman hated children and that, while for years she had studied the merchandising of the things they wore, she had never been able or willing to crush her dislike. The store in question straightaway made a change and put a motherly type in charge, with all the success that could be desired.

Sometimes it is a physical defect that makes a person unsuited for the job in hand. In the army an exhaustive examination of the rookie gave an accurate analysis of both his physical and mental virtues and defects. Such investigation has been introduced by some stores anxious to place the newcomer in his proper position, but there are many instances to be quoted where important qualifications have been overlooked in other establishments not so careful. Take, for instance, the discovery made in one place that one of the three silk salesmen was color blind. The employment manager was willing to agree that if that man belonged in any place it surely was not in the silk department where color is so important.

Beyond the consideration of the individual's fitness for his job comes the general idea of how a store organization is composed. An executive who is keeping in close touch with personnel developments favors the application of a probationary period of employment. He said:

"Any one who looks into the make-up of the usual store organization ought to be struck by the number of what I call hangers-on. These people have never made good and probably never will. They are probably worth the small money paid to them if you consider the item of wage alone. But, if you see in this hanger-on a person who is keeping out of the store's employ some one else a good deal more capable, then the matter should assume a different aspect. Some store owners, I imagine, neglect to see this possibility. What occurs to them is that the person is not much good, but that they are getting the worth of their money at that.

"Consequently, to furnish a store with fresh and new enthusiasm, it seems to me an opening should always be provided, and, in order to make room for desirable types, a probationary period of employment should be adopted. This would prevent the accumulation of inefficient workers, since it would become necessary for them to make good or leave the store's employ. If the plan I describe is adopted, there will be less cluttering up of the sort that hurts store service and creates so diffident an organization."

FUR AUCTION CLOSES.

Good Prices for Squirrel and Raccoon at Last Day's Sale.

The generally good prices obtained for squirrel and the active bidding for the choicer assortments of this fur were easily the leading features of the closing day of the fur sale in the Masonic Hall here. Several good lots were included in the collection, and a high price of $1.28 each was paid for prime dark Russian skins. Squirrel prices were said to be well above the dealers' original estimates of the values of the skins, and more than one buyer was at a loss to understand why the bids were so high. The collection contained over 124,000 skins.

Next in interest to squirrel came raccoon, which also sold well and brought good prices, the highest of which was $7.70. Bidding for mole, the collection of which was said not to be of particularly good quality, dragged quite a little, and the best of the approximately 475,000 pelts sold brought 15 cents. The highest prices of the day were obtained for the offerings of polar, grizzly and black bears. Polar bear reached $52.50, while the best grizzly and black bearskins brought $20 and $15.50, respectively. About 51,000 ermine fetched prices fetched ranging from 4 cents to $1.70 each.

Comment by shippers and buyers at the close of the sale indicated that the results were generally satisfactory to them. For one thing, it was said, the market's ability to absorb the offerings showed that the fur business was not really in so poor a condition as had been asserted. This fact, it was further said, was borne out by the prices paid for many of the skins sold during the week, which were disposed of at figures substantially higher than had been marked in the buyer's catalogue. These figures had been based on the nominal market value of the skins.

The furs sold yesterday brought the price ranges shown below. Also given in the table are the declines in the average prices brought yesterday, as compared with the averages paid for similar furs at the Spring sale of the New York Fur Auction Sales Corporation here last April:

	Low Price.	High Price.	Decline (Per Ct.)
Black bear	$0.10	$15.50	25
Brown bear	0.20	8.25	35
Grizzly bear	6.75	20.00	..
Polar bear	7.00	52.50	35
Fitch	0.05	2.20	*80
Mole	0.01	0.15	60
Nutria	0.11	3.15	55
Ermine	0.04	1.70	50
Raccoon	0.02	7.70	40
Squirrel	0.02	1.28	25

*Offering consisted of German and Russian skins.

Sales for the day were unofficially set at $240,000, which brought the grand total realized to $1,925,000. "Prompt day" will be Feb. 24. On and after Jan. 27 the offices and warehouse of the corporation will be located at 550 and 552 West Thirty-sixth Street.

DO BIG MEN MAKE BETTER SALESMEN?

Reasons Why the Sales Manager of a Knit Goods House Holds This to Be So.

While on his Spring buying trip, a buyer of floor coverings recently called on a local concern with which he had never before done business and asked to see the sales manager. The man to whom he expressed his desire was well below medium height. It turned out that the sales manager was standing some distance away, in plain sight, talking with another buyer. One of the two was also short, and, more or less to make conversation while he was waiting, the buyer asked the man who had met him at the door if the sales manager was not the taller one.

At this question the man bridled up somewhat. "How is it," he asked, "that you big fellows (the buyer was tall himself) never think a little man is good for anything?" The buyer immediately disclaimed all intention of "knocking" little men, but the question set him thinking. He began asking questions about the relation of size to salesmanship. The replies he got, although they gave reasons both for and against the little man as a salesman, generally favored the big man.

"Pick out ten successful salesmen at random," said the sales manager of a knit goods house in reply to the buyer's question, "and at least eight of them will exceed five feet, six inches in height. At least five of the eight will be taller than five feet, eight inches. This may be because there are more big men in the country than there are short ones, but I personally think it is due to the fact that larger men make the better salesmen. To begin with, they are able to put up a better 'front,' and they are for the most part less sensitive than small men. I know personally of several men who have avoided the selling game because of their lack of height, feeling that their short stature would militate against their success on the road.

"Analyzing the matter, it may be said to work out this way: Lack of size is associated, psychologically, with youth. Youth is associated with inexperience, and inexperience is associated with lack of confidence. Without the ability to establish confidence, of course, no man can ever hope to become a successful salesman.

"An incident in which a salesman's lack of size nearly cost his house a very large order occurred some years ago. The salesman was employed by a wholesale concern which at that time manufactured some of the textiles it sold. Things had been quiet in one line for some time, and an accumulation had piled up that the head of the business determined to get rid of at a sacrifice. A quantity of the merchandise, valued at more than $50,000, was offered to the buyer of a big Middle Western store at prices representing a considerable sacrifice. The store was located in territory covered by a salesman well under medium height. He worked the sale up nicely until it came time to get the buyer's name on the dotted line. There things hung fire until the point was reached at which the deal threatened to fall through. In desperation the salesman wired his chief for assistance. The latter, who was a large, heavy man, rushed to the scene, via the Twentieth Century Limited, and soon fixed things up. Yet he offered the buyer nothing which the salesman had not already offered. It was merely a big deal requiring a big man to inspire confidence in the buyer.

"To my mind, a big man makes much the better salesman in introducing a new line or in doing 'missionary' work generally. A great deal depends in such cases on the impression that is made on the first call, and I think a big man has a better chance, all else being equal, of putting new goods over. In the case of staple goods, however, or where a line has been on the market so long that it has become generally known to the trade, there is no reason why short salesmen should not do as well as taller men. There the need of putting up an impressive 'front' is not so great.

"Proponents of short men are likely to point to Napoleon as a sample of what a small man can do. One friend of mine argues that he did about the biggest selling stunt possible, that of selling himself to the French people. My retort to this statement is that Napoleon was really an executive, in a figurative sense, and not a salesman. Even at that he made a mighty poor finish. Big men have done better, as the success of Washington and Pershing shows.

"The small man, however, has at least one thing to cheer him up. As a well-known pugilist once remarked, 'The bigger they are the harder they fall.' That sometimes proves to be the case with salesmen as well as prizefighters. I know of no sorrier spectacle than a big man making a dub of himself in trying to sell a bill of goods."

Boston Merchant Says These Will Check Buying at Retail.

A very positive sentiment against price advances has developed among leading merchants, who see danger of certain markets slipping once more into the seller's favor. Increases made at the present time, it is explained, will be hurtful for three reasons: They may lead to oversupply again in wholesale markets through manufacturing for an exaggerated demand; they may halt liquidation by retailers who will hold goods until the market meets their cost prices; and consumer buying, now of a freer sort, may balk again if prices show a tendency to rise. These were some of the angles considered by P. A. O'Connell of the E. T. Slattery Company of Boston and President of the Specialty Stores Association.

"The big retail operators," said Mr. O'Connell, "are determined not to let the market run away with them again. Prices are now down to a point where the public seems willing to buy, and it would be suicidal to advance them with consumers in so critical a frame of mind. For that reason we must maintain our original sale prices and continue to do business on the smallest possible margin. Volume sales are the only salvation of the retail business during this liquidation period, and profits must come from volume. In the case of our store, we are refusing to pay more for goods and will place orders elsewhere when advances are asked. If we cannot get the merchandise we want at the desired price, we must put off our purchases until the proper values are to be found. Our price policy must be right, because January business in our store showed a large increase over the same month last year.

"This increase, and any increase which a store is now making, is accomplished only through the most intensive effort. Mark-downs and inventory losses in the retail business have been very heavy, despite the claims of many store critics who charge that they have still to take on themselves part of the burden of readjustment. One store, to my knowledge, took 40 per cent. mark-down in its ready-to-wear department last month. Others have made similarly drastic reductions. As a general rule, the large merchants commenced liquidating as soon as this was possible. Price breaks in the wholesale markets, it must be remembered, came along sharply and suddenly. What hesitancy developed on the part of the retail trade in following wholesale values was due more to uncertainty regarding future cuts than to a desire to hold up the program of readjustment.

"Just as there seems to be an erroneous opinion concerning liquidation of retail stocks, which by the way was commenced in April and May before the full force of the wholesale movement was under way, so, too, there is a misunderstanding about retail profits. These came from dollar volume by use of practically the same mark-up percentages that prevailed in normal times. We did not sell so many units of merchandise, but we sold them for more money. The margin of profits over the entire period of inflation did not vary 2 per cent., to my certain knowledge.

"With the decline in value, it becomes necessary to make up the money difference in sales through a larger volume of business, the sale of more merchandise units, at smaller profit margins. This is impossible if manufacturers follow the tendency lately evident of raising prices on the mere evidence of a restored demand, because the higher prices go the less likely is a merchant either to exceed his previous sales volume or to maintain it. I am willing to say that price increases are eagerly awaited by some retailers who have been badly caught in the break in merchandise values. Many of them are absolutely broke on today's price basis. They have stocks which depreciated so much in value that their capital has been practically wiped out. The capital of other stores has been seriously impaired.

"In considering the danger that lies in price advances at the present time, it would be well for manufacturer, and retailer as well, to consider that in the tremendous drive to sell surpluses there is apt to come a time when the public will reach its saturation point in purchasing. A large quantity of clothing, shoes and other goods have been sold in the last six months, or else there would not have been the clearance which has taken place. This angle of the situation is certainly worth studying, along with the public's attitude on price. It may only take just a small increase to drive the consumer back to waiting for further reductions, since his needs have been somewhat satisfied.

"It would be just as well for the manufacturer and wholesaler to go slow about advancing prices for the reasons I have described. There is small advantage in taking a little additional profit now, only to lose it, and more besides, by causing a repetition of the conditions we have passed through. The retailer is determined to oppose price increases because he knows there is danger in them from several sources, and a little study of the situation ought to convince the wholesaler that he is right."

The Need of Raising Individual Standards of Production.

Remarking on the recent effort to stabilize in piece goods, a suggestion made by him as a means of improving ready-to-wear conditions, R. Sadowsky, a leading garment manufacturer, stated yesterday that the next step earnestly desired by the industry is for the workers' union to consider some plan for enabling cheaper production. He admitted that the piece work system has small chance of being restored, but declared that some method must be found to increase individual efficiency.

"With the broad vision of its leadership," said Mr. Sadowsky, "the union ought to see that the wages of its members cannot stand pat with everything else coming down. If the opportunity was seized now to adjust individual production standards so that the workers would earn what they receive, there would be less chance of wages being cut, as they must otherwise be. Personally I have no idea of a reduction being made either to a pre-war level or near it. The cost of living is double what it was, and it goes without saying that wages should be maintained on that ratio.

"However, it would be better all around if individual production standards were raised. The union should make it possible for every manufacturer to hold his employes responsible for a satisfactory amount of work. If the right to discharge was given to us it certainly would help. The union could undertake measures to guard the rights of its members, at the same time declaring in favor of a full day's work."

CEYLON'S TEA INDUSTRY.

Depressed Because the Prices Are Below Production Cost.

The depression in Ceylon's tea industry is critical, says Consul Keiser at Colombo. The quantity exported from the island is normal, but the heavy stocks of low-grade teas held in London have reacted unfavorably on that market, upon which Ceylon is dependent for its tea prices. It is necessary to ship tea from Ceylon as soon as cured; otherwise the humidity and temperature of the climate cause the tea to deteriorate rapidly.

The present cost of production averages 46 Ceylon cents a pound, while the present average of prices obtained at local auctions is only 34.5 cents a pound. The majority of estates have inaugurated a system of "fine plucking" which will reduce the quantity picked and insure higher grade tea. Several estates have stopped producing. By heavy pruning, so that pruning will not be necessary for six months, these estates can again start producing with little difficulty. Some tea estates are being offered for sale at very low figures.

To Show Popular-Priced Goods.

Buyers of popular-priced merchandise will have plenty to attract their attention in this market during the next two weeks. At the Hotel Pennsylvania tomorrow will begin the Spring exhibition of these goods under the auspices of the Interstate Exhibitors' Corporation. It will open with a luncheon and continue throughout the week.

A week from tomorrow will start the Spring merchandise fair of the Merchandise Exhibit Company, Inc., which is to be held in the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, and which will continue until Feb. 5. About 2,000 buyers are expected to be in the city to look over the offerings of the two shows.

Bankers' Council for Waist Men.

A bankers' council will be added to those already formed or planned for the United Waist League of America, by which its members derive expert advice on particular problems that arise in the industry. Silk and cotton goods councils are already functioning, with the result that members receive first hand and reliable information concerning the best policies to be followed in their purchases of these materials. The councils are made up of associate members.

Gleanings in Foreign Trade Fields.

Mexican Export Duty on Copper.

According to a telegram from Consul Cornelius Ferris, Mexico City, by a decree effective from Dec. 25, 1920, copper for export is free of duty when the market value of electrolyte copper in New York City is 15 cents or less per pound.

Embargo on Fixed Oils Removed.

According to a cablegram from Commercial Attaché W. C. Huntington from Paris, a French decree removes the prohibition against the exportation of pure fixed oils and establishes an export duty of 2.50 francs per 100 kilos on sulphurated oil cakes for use as fertilizer and 10 francs per 100 kilos on other oil cakes.

Not Altogether a Pest.

Opossums were introduced into New Zealand from Australia many years ago, and have increased until they have become a pest in some localities, especially in the fruit-growing sections. However, their value for fur is said to outweigh in general the damage they do in certain localities, and they are favorably looked upon. It is proposed to encourage the increase of opossums in all forest districts.

New Zealand's Wheat Crop.

Consul General Winslow, reporting from Auckland, New Zealand, says that late returns indicate that there was a marked increase in the acreage seeded to wheat and some other grains during this season, and that the apple crop will furnish at least 200,000 crates of apples for export this year. It is expected that the wheat returns will be sufficient to supply the demands along that line for the coming year. During the last two years New Zealand has imported from Australia about 2,000,000 bushels per annum.

Need of Careful Packing.

Notice is given by Trade Commissioner Ferrin at Melbourne, Australia, that goods should be packed by American exporters so as to be received by the customer in first-class condition, to avoid any loophole for cancellation. In a time of falling prices excuses for cancellations are eagerly sought, and at such times goods that might have passed when prices are rising are rejected. American houses that ship their goods carefully and see that they are up to sample have little if any trouble. The Japanese are expert packers, and damage in transit in almost never heard of in connection with their shipments.

Cotton in Spanish Morocco.

The recent trial plantings of cotton in the Rio Martin district of Tetuan, carried out by a few Catalonian agriculturists, have proved so encouraging that other Spaniards contemplate making more extensive plantings in different sections of the Spanish zone in Morocco. The seed used in the Rio Martin fields was mostly from Louisiana and Egypt. The plants attained a height of two feet, and had ninety branches, each branch bearing three bolls. The seed was sown two inches deep. The planters calculate that each hectare of land planted in this territory should produce 500 kilos of cotton (about 445 pounds an acre). They also state that the best results were obtained from the Louisiana seed.

Ban on Swedish Coffee Imports.

According to a cablegram from Consul General D. I. Murphy, Stockholm, the Swedish Government has imposed a prohibition against the importation of coffee for an indefinite time. The decree became effective from Jan. 12, 1921.

Argentine Crop Estimates.

According to a cable received from Commercial Attaché Feely, the wheat crop of Argentina is now expected to reach 5,000,000 tons, with an exportable surplus of 3,200,000 tons. The estimate of the linseed crop is placed at 1,000,000 tons.

To Use Motion Pictures.

The official organ of the Sydney Chamber of Commerce announces that an exhibition of the manufactures of Great Britain through the medium of motion pictures is to be shown in the principal cities of Australia in the near future. It is stated that over 100 leading manufacturers of Great Britain are co-operating in the movement, and that every principal industry of the United Kingdom will be represented.

Registration of Trade-Marks.

In the Netherlands East Indies owners of trade-marks are given legal protection against wrongful use by others. The right of prime use is accorded to the person who can prove himself to be the first to have used it. Trade-marks are registered at the registration office at Batavia, and while priority of registration carries with it the right of prime use, this claim may be disputed, and the right of prior use may be established in favor of the disputant who proves his claim.

Trade Conditions at Singapore.

Singapore, owing to its geographical position, is a clearing house between Europe and the Orient. Consul Dickinson reports that the trade in 1919 was double that of 1913. Exports to the United States increased from 48,000,000 Singapore dollars in 1918 to 312,000,000 in 1919. Leading articles of export are: Rubber, tin, gambier, gutta percha, hides, rattan, sago, flour, pepper, tapioca, copra, arecanuts, nutmeg, canes, canned pineapples, &c. There are in all forty-five American firms and banks in Singapore and thirteen foreign banks, all doing a satisfactory business.

Need for Commercial Films.

The office of the Commercial Attaché at Peking is constantly receiving requests from commercial organizations, colleges, schools and Young Men's Christian Associations for motion-picture films of a commercial and industrial type. Mr. Arnold believes that American firms should know of this demand, and send such films through their representatives in China. His office could distribute them most effectively. In view of the fact that only a small percentage of the people of China can read or write, even their own language, the motion picture is peculiarly adapted for advertising purposes, and at present it is the only way short of an actual demonstration of the products themselves by which American manufacturers can make their goods known. The value of films would be greatly increased by the insertion of Chinese subtitles.

FEATURES OF PARIS HATS.

Attractive Flower Trimmings Are Favored in Some Models.

Unusually attractive flower trimmings are being used on the newer Spring hats by the leading French modistes, according to the Paris correspondent of the Retail Millinery Association of America. Of the things now seen there, she says, in part:

"There is, for instance, a flat velvet poppy which Maria Guy uses on a medium-sized shape. This poppy is of a rusty color and has all around its petals a tiny white edge, which is nothing but a special paint meant to give the appearance of leather. There are four of them used on a certain hat, two on each side right under the brim, placed back to back and coming over the ears. The hat is made of the same rusty colored velvet, with brown lisere straw work at the edge—a kind of thick roll put astride the edge of the brim.

"For tailored hats ribbon is still chosen, more particularly taffeta. There is what we call taffeta glacé, a combination of two colors woven together, which is much used at present, especially in bright shades. Reboux shows a medium-sized black straw mushroom which, although quite simple, is new in appearance on account of its trimming. The brim is cut at the front, giving way to a big bow drapery which, starting on the front of the crown, finishes through a cut under the brim and meets the facing, which is of the same shade of taffeta, a new one called geranium. The geranium glacé is a combination of cerise and white woven together."

Gray Goods Sales Taper Off.

The effect of the unsettled cotton market was plainly seen in the sales of gray goods made here yesterday. Further buying of 39-inch 68-72s was done for nearby delivery at 9¾ cents, and January-February lots of Eastern 38½-inch 60-48s were moved at 7¾ cents. Among the sheetings sales were nearby 4-yard 48-square cloths at 8¼ cents. Nine cents net was again paid for 3.95-yard drills, deliveries running to March. Buyers of sateens took 39-inch 64-104 4.20-yard goods at 14 cents.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Hoffman & Hartblay, Inc., resident buyers, 117 West Thirty-third Street, have added to the list of accounts handled by them the Herman Zodiag Department Store of Shreveport, La., and Martin Frank, Lancaster, Pa.

Stanley Macrae, resident buyer, now situated at 1,270 Broadway, will take new and larger quarters at 1,261 Broadway at the end of this week.

Berg Brothers, wholesalers of general merchandise, 478-482 Broadway, have declared a bonus of 10 per cent. to all employes for the fiscal year ended Dec. 31, 1920.

On May 11 and 12 the National Paper Box Manufacturers' Association and the National Paper Box Supply Men's Association will hold a joint convention at the Waldorf-Astoria. At a dinner to be held in conjunction with the meeting, Vice President Coolidge will be the principal speaker.

VEGETABLE FABRICS EXHIBITED HERE

Commerce Bureau Shows Textiles Produced From Nettles, Hops and Cornstalks.

PAPER FROM PINE NEEDLES

Sport Jackets, Table Cloths and Sweaters Among Articles Made of Plant Fibres.

Samples of vegetable fibres and textiles and articles of clothing and paper made from them are being exhibited at the branch here of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in the Custom House Building at Bowling Green. The exhibit, which will continue until Jan. 29, is the second of its kind, the bureau recently having displayed clothing and other articles made of paper textiles.

The exhibits which are made from grasses, plants and leaves are the products of a process developed in Germany. Among the fibres used are those from nettles, hops, willow bark, pine needles, cornstalks and asparagus, which are made into overcoatings, table cloths, paper, sport jackets, underwear, sweaters, stockings and socks, worsted and many other men's and women's garments. It has been found that the fibre taken out of the pine needle can be readily used in paper mills, it being possible to produce a strong and tough paper from it.

One of the fibres—China grass—was brought into the United States before the war and was taken up by several textile concerns, especially by those manufacturing woolen goods and underwear. Textile experts assert that this fibre is of especial importance in the manufacture of underwear, as it prevents garments from shrinking.

"The attention of textile men in Europe and elsewhere is being attracted to the remarkable results being attained in Germany in the manufacture of yarn from grasses, plants and leaves," says a statement of the bureau, describing the exhibit and the uses to which fibres are put in the manufacture of textiles. "This new industry was established in 1912 at Fuerstenberg, Germany. During the first year in which the plant was operated it confined its activities to the manufacture and sale of fibres.

Industry Grew in War.

"In 1913 spinning machinery was set up, and since then the spinning of yarn from these fibres has been carried on on an ever-increasing scale. In the eight years of its existence the products of this concern have covered a wide range of vegetable fibres, including China grass, Australian seaweed, jute, old jute rags and shoddy worsted yarn. A number of others were worked up during the war and extensively used in the textile industry. Some of these fibres were abandoned after the war, owing to the fact that the supply in Germany was not sufficient to warrant their permanent use.

"The vegetable fibre derived from China grass is known as solidonia. It is similar to ramie, which is known and used in the United States. The German fibre company, by means of a special process, produces a long, fine, soft and curly fibre. It looks very much like wool and mixes readily with that product, thus opening a wide field for its use in the woolen industry. Solidonia gained a wide use on account of the shortage of wool during the war. As a substitute for linen, solidonia has been used in Germany for the manufacture of table linen of beauty and strength. It has also been used for machine belting. Hosiery mills and underwear mills have produced from it socks and stockings which are difficult to tear, unshrinkable underwear and sporting jackets of fine quality and strength.

"The German woolen mills have manufactured an army cloth which, composed of 75 per cent. wool and 25 per cent. solidonia, it is asserted surpasses in tensile strength any pure wool cloth. Similar results are claimed in respect to paper-makers' felts, which, with a percentage of solidonia mixture, show considerable increase in strength. Women's and men's clothing of half solidonia and half wool or shoddy, especially in piece-dyed goods, have found a welcome on the market. In 1914 solidonia in the carded stage found a ready market at 30 cents a pound delivered in New York or Boston.

Fibre Like Wool.

"Another fibre from which has been obtained splendid results is the fibre known as posidonia. This is also a vegetable fibre. It is derived from seaweed dredged in Australia and cleansed and washed in sweet water. Brought to Germany, the fibre is subjected to a chemical treatment to soften it and make it resilient, the original fibre being stiff and harsh. The staple of this fibre is declared to be equal to a medium staple wool, and it is spun on the worsted and woolen system. This fibre is characterized by an elasticity and springiness, and the cloth which is made out of pure posidonia appears to show scarcely any creases. German cloth mills have mixed posidonia with wool shoddy and cloths of good strength and appearance have been obtained. German textile men believe that this fibre, by reason of its springiness, will find a wide use in the carpet industry. The fibre sold at half the price of shoddy before the war.

"The chief way in which jute has been employed in the United States is in the form of cheap lining and burlap. The German Fibre Company has accomplished some unusual results with jute. By a special process of chemicl treatment a long, fine fibre is being produced, a fibre that can readily be spun on the worsted system, pure or mixed with wool. This concern has obtained fine results also from old jute rags, which are being cleansed and made into shoddy, which also can be spun on the worsted or woolen system. Serges made from old jute rags or cloth made from half wool and half jute, wool or piece-dyed, are being used for women's costumes, overcoating, &c., and have puzzled many experienced textile men. Furthermore, sweaters and vests are being made from all jute worsted yarn, and it has been difficult to recognize them as being made of such.

"The inventor of the processes has been the Managing Director of this company's plant since its establishment in 1912. Before that he for many years worked in the capacity of dye chemist with the Swiss Dye Works at Basle, Switzerland. For fifteen years he pursued in his private laboratory his studies of the treatment of various vegetable fibres with a view to their adaptation to the textile industry."

The Hindu Princess Whose Heart Was Broken

She was sixteen years old, the daughter of an Indian Prince, and she had never before been outside her father's house alone. Yet—

Here she was, dressed in her brother's clothes, among the mango trees, wiping with her soft, dark hair the feet of the man she loved, who lay desperately wounded. And when he recovered consciousness he struck her in the face!

"Daughter of a traitor!" he cried. "Infidel! At the very hour of my death you have desecrated my whole life!"

But, after all, he didn't die of his wounds and she didn't die—she lived with a broken heart! Read this story in the February

MRS. GRUNDY AND MISS 1921

"Whenever two or three elders were gathered together."

By HELEN BULLITT LOWRY

WHO has turned over that new leaf for 1921—the new generation or the old?

It is too early to tell yet. In a few weeks, perhaps, the returns may be all in, and we can decide whether those radical youngsters have decided to behave more like their elders or whether those hidebound elders have been convinced that they ought to adopt the ideas of their children; whether, in short, the leaf of the Book of Life was turned forward or backward this New Year's.

Fancy the reproachful expression of the thrifty shade of Benjamin Franklin, if all that print paper and all those shocked tea-table conversations of 1920 were expended in vain and neither side has prevailed on the other to reform!

For whenever two or three elders were gathered together in the last year there was somebody to whisper about the outrageous new customs of the outrageous new generation.

Now, for the benefit of those of the "older generation" who have been imperfectly informed, who have been forced until now to exclaim in abstract terms of those "awful children" without knowing exactly what it is that those awful children do: The truth is that the awful children do some awful things, according to the standards of ten years ago. Ten years ago débutantes were pretending to know less than they knew. Now they are pretending to know more, with all of the consequences that such a pretense brings in its train. I quote from a New York matron who has looked with concern into conditions because she herself has a young daughter scheduled to "come out" next year:

"Ten years ago punch was served at an entertainment for young people, but the guest who brought in whisky or any sort of alcohol would have been de trop. The breach of etiquette would have been so extreme that no amount of social position could carry it off. Nowadays the man who carries a flask of raw whisky to the private home is taken for granted. He is even welcomed by the host as an aid in conserving his own private stock.

"When the punch system prevailed it was easy enough for the experienced hostess to control how much the inexperienced young girls or boys drank at her entertainment. If the assemblage became too hilarious, she could squeeze in a few oranges. Today it is the young men and the girls who do the dispensing and the deciding. Last Summer each youth brought his private roadster to the clubhouse, and between dances it was taken for granted that a little spin should be taken for refreshments. Ten years ago there was no such reason for wanting to get away from the rest of the crowd."

With the Winter season matters grow worse in New York social circles, it appears. Now comes the servant problem, which is making it more and more inconvenient to entertain on a large scale in a private home. Hostesses have found it convenient to entertain in the hotels. Again enters prohibition. It is customary for each man or each clique of men to engage a private room for the evening, because there is no public bar. This is a condition that Mrs. Herbert Shipman points out.

Mrs. Shipman is the wife of the Rev. Herbert Shipman, rector of one of the fashionable Fifth Avenue churches and once for nine years Chaplain of West Point. Her observations, therefore, are not only of New York's young society, but of the "smart" young society of West Point, "there" and "now."

"Ten years ago a girl's reputation would be utterly gone if it were known that she had been in a man's hotel room," said she the other day. "Now her obvious reason for going there is 'to get a drink.' The chaperones themselves go for the same purpose, he who is to object? The trouble is that the personal hotel bar has been accepted as an established fact in society."

A physician with many patients in the fashionable "sets" discussed the matter frankly with me.

"This younger generation," said he, "is throwing off the old tradition of one rule for the men and another for the girls."

"Are men of the better class distressed and bewildered by this development?" I asked him.

"Perhaps. But have they a right to be? Men made the rule that they could do things not permissible for the womenfolk, and now the women have decided to apply the rule to themselves. Suffrage is only one small item, remember, in the restless struggle of the last century, which has been for equality of the sexes. The younger generation—in New York and I presume everywhere—is modeling itself after women of a type which defies old conventions, a type which was not common in polite society until recently. The débutante is rouging and painting her lips frank abandon today. Groups of young girls and men go to the Ri way jazz restaurants without chaperone to give them the ground of experience. The matrons have used the servant lem as an excuse to save money to avoid the work of formal gatherings—with the result that young people have left home their pleasures. Not even chaperonage of the reliable ch chauffeur is left. The girl's re is 'afraid' to ask him to stay o'clock, much less to 4 o'clock. public taxi takes his place."

Not only in the restricted lim New York society or the wealthy cles of other cities is the older eration bemoaning new manners morals. A few days ago dea Wellesley fairly shivered from shock of a lecture delivered by Augustus Trowbridge, wife Princeton professor.

To Mrs. Trowbridge belon credit for giving circulation to colloquialism—"petting parties." did not explain what a "pe party" was. Apparently she need to. But observers of New York social changes infe are referred to the [illegible] scenes of fondling such as are passed at many public places

There is one version. The details may be different, but the outstanding arguments of the two generations are somewhat the same as those advanced in the now famous Grundy controversy that was waged in The Atlantic Monthly for six long months of 1920. You remember—or perhaps you do not read The Atlantic Monthly and have to be told—that this particular debate, participated in by professional writers and by amateurs, started off with a story, signed by a person calling himself Mr. Grundy, who presented both sides—the surest and best way to make everybody mad. The old time maid was pictured—she who trembled, wore drooped eyelashes, and quite dropped the rose pinned on her bosom. Next came the flapper of our times—who flings her dinner roll across the table, with the raucous cry, "Hi there, catch it, you boob!"

"The young men are too careless even to wear full dress and it's because the girls make themselves cheap."

"Both were throwing their gauntlet into the arena of popularity," wrote Mr. Grundy. "You may prefer the fallen rose to the hurled roll—but the motor power behind both is the same."

He summed up the count against the younger generation, even while he defended it in the words: "May evolution forbid that the bottle of smelling salts should be reinstated"—keeping, as it were, one leg over the fence in his criticism—or maybe in this particular discussion we'd better say limb—"the freedom of certain popular girls toward the intoxication of their partners."

Yet even after this catalogue of follies he finds room for hope that the old antagonism between the two generations will be lessened. Which side has most need to cultivate charity and tolerance toward the other is left undetermined.

Katherine Fullerton Gerould comes next in the magazine controversy. She brings forward an interesting explanation for the whole "demoralization" of our younger generation. They haven't been brought up with a hope of heaven and a wholesome fear of hell.

"The parents of this younger generation that is shocking us kept their morality when they threw over their religion. The elders discarded dogmas, but their characters had nevertheless been molded in a fairly firm Christian ethic. They cannot pass on that morality without the dogma except in a weakened form. At present they cling mostly to the recognized social code."

Yes, even as I quote Mrs. Gerould I recall the voice of maternal authority entreating, "Daughter, do not dance on Sunday. It grates on my sensibilities."

"We are left," Miss Gerould goes on, "with an attitude of mere politeness toward the Commandments—and humanity will go the primrose path unless forbidden by some authority in which he believes."

After that the debate in The Atlantic is handed over to youth—to youth, the crude, the dominant.

"I would like to remark," cries Youth, from his experiences of war, "that the older generation had pretty well ruined the world before passing it on to us. And now through the soft-headed folly of those painfully shocked Grundys, we have that devastating wisdom which is safe only for burned out embers of grizzled cautious men."

Youth's defense of his own generation is that Youth not only fought the World War, but does the world's work. "We haven't so much time for the noble procrastinations of talk between the sexes. The unchaperoned motor flight by night. The modern dancing. The scantiness of modern dress. The sharing of the smuggled bottle. The indifference of modesty, for the elaborate rigmarole of chivalry. Our elders have made us work as they never had to work in their pampered lives. We're men and women before our time in the flower of our full-blooded youth."

In the Decorous Days of the Last Century.

There follows much concerning the actual statistics of morals in the eighties and nineties, with this fine final insult: "When they look back they see their youth through a mist of muslin, flannels, tennis, bicycles, Tennyson, Browning and Blue Danube waltzes."

Without enumerating all the letters in the Contributors' Department, where the question was debated pro and con, those are the two sides of the controversy laid on in strong, crude colors.

The colors are half tones, but the principle is quite the same when you hear of the combat between Only Half a Generation Ago and the New Generation. I have talked the matter over with a number of young matrons of that same New York's formal society.

"The young men are too careless even to wear full dress, and it's because the girls make themselves cheap," they tell me in low, shocked tones. "The débutantes dress in formal brocades, such as our mothers were wearing when we came out—and we were wearing white satin or pink taffeta. The girls want only cabarets and jazz parties—and the boys are all too young to have learned any manners, younger than they were when I was a débutante."

Those who were shocking their own set of elders when the turkey trot was new are now getting shocked by the toddle. In every community some changes have come that are amazing the Half a Generation Ago—who usually begin their criticism with the words, "Now, you know I'm not a prude—BUT—"

It is reported that it has become discreet for the new crop of "debbies" to have sentimental passages with "married men." I confess to a decade that was taught to keep two manners in stock, your married-man manner and your unmarried-man manner. But the ethics of my Half a Generation Ago débutantes, I recall, allowed us at least four fiancés.

As the pert young "bud" pointed out, our minds had been quite acclimated to a "fast young married crowd," which some day maybe we would join. But our imaginations had not compassed the possibility of being ourselves as gay as the married crowd. Just on the face value of it, weren't there too many "old hens" at our balls, sitting around to gossip about us? The day of the emancipation from the chaperone had not arrived. The day of the double standard in drinking still lingered. We knew what it was to encounter intoxicated partners, but beautiful ones in color which present exquisite reproductions of the richly colored decorations of some of the famous Spanish ceilings. One of these is from a modern drawing in color of a ceiling in the former Dominican Convent of Mount Zion, which stood in the heart of Barcelona but was finally demolished. "As late as twenty years ago," the authors say, "this famous ceiling could have been preserved had any one been interested in doing so." The rare beauty and the delicate artistry of the design and its coloring show anew the heedless and callous nature of a generation which permits the utter destruction of objects of such great loveliness and historic interest. Of another ceiling, that of the Rocaverde Castle, at Perelada, whose ceiling is pictured in colors, they describe the color as "nothing less than startling," but say that in the dim light in which it is seen "it melts into harmonious glow." And they add this pregnant sentence: "Repeated today, Perelada would probably be considered ultra modern, like most revivals of ancient art."

Two ceilings taken from the "House of the Shells," at Salamanca, which has been widely pictured, are of the sixteenth century. One of them is typical of numerous rooms used solely for service and stabling. Its timbers, hewed from red pine and but slightly embellished, have never received any treatment beyond an occasional bath of oil. The illustration shows beauty of structure and proportion. Another one is described as being "unique in its color scheme of cerulean blue and white."

Romance hovers about the ceiling pictured from the palace of the Dukes of Alva, Seville, rich in its historic memories and in its examples of the architecture of Andalusia. It was begun in the fifteenth century by the Pineda family, who were obliged to sell it in 1483 in order to raise the money necessary to ransom the head of the house, who had been captured by the Moors. It was bought by the powerful Ribera family, who were great patrons of art in Seville, and through intermarriage passed into the possession of the Dukes of Alva, who have kept it in good condition. The Olea House of Seville, built at the end of the fifteenth century, was long the home of the famous Ponce de Leon family, whose name is so intertwined with the early history of our own country. For more than a century it has been owned and inhabited by an English family who have preserved all its beauties with jealous care. One of its ornate ceilings is presented in this work.

From the Museum of Art and Archaeology, Barcelona, there are pictured a series of painted Gothic frieze-boards, dating from the fourteenth century, the themes representing the persecution and crucifixion of Christ, in which the authors think it possible that the figures were copied from some Persian manuscript or carving, knights on horseback with the figures separated by graceful flower motives, and boats filled with rowers who also carry standards.

In their foreword the authors say: "that old wooden ceilings are more numerous in Spain than in other European countries is due not alone to the fact that many more were built. When France and England began to welcome new fashions, even to tear out or fur over fine old oak beams and panels and in their place put up plaster of Renaissance or baroque design, Spain, true to her tradition, kept her old ceilings and went on constructing new ones of the same sort. * * * Today, even allowing for the many notable Spanish ceilings destroyed by fire and actual vandalism, also for the many sold entire out of the country, the number still to be seen is surprising.

they had acquired their alcohol at the men's bar. Outside of the "fast young married crowd," the private parties had only punch, or maybe one lone cocktail.

Yet our turkey trot, we were told, was considered downright "scandalous" by the generation that had been Gibson Girls. To each half decade its own shocks!

"'I've stopped dancing,' explain the young matrons who have grown stout since their husbands (i. e., ex-turkey-trot partners) have prospered and their feet have sat long afternoon hours beneath the bridge table. "Now, you know, I'm not a prude, but I simply am not willing to go the length those children do—" And at that a choice bit of gossip is related. And one of them, from the secure domestic comfort of a husband, a house, and a cook, gives this advice to a young unmarried woman:

"I don't think that you ought to have an apartment. Some one might misunderstand you. I never thought of two unmarried girls renting an apartment when I used to study in New York."

Those who are married would have those who are not remain perennial boarders, because they themselves never were faced with the problems of 1920. For it is the biological law of the world that each should stop understanding where her own experiences of life leave off.

"And that is the fundamental reason why every generation thinks its own ethics are the best," comments a man who has danced with enough crops of "debbies" to look back over the changes of fifteen years, as well as over one year on the front in France. "But, when all's said and done, did mid-Victorianism make good? The world has tried prudishness for nearly a hundred years now—and were homes any happier? Have husbands been more faithful? Have wives been more efficient home-makers?

"If the Grundys, who are doing all this worrying, would only read history, they'd discover that the world has gone through many lax periods and the human race survived them. Political liberty was the fruit of the eighteenth century—and look at its morals! Isn't it possible that a hundred years from now this generation will be known by the name of the 'generation that won the great war'? Why not let each generation work out its own ethics?"

Not for us!

Everybody has been trying this year as never before to make everybody else live by the ethics of his pet generation. The very blue law propagandists are trying to force the Generation Ago itself to live by the code of Two Generations Ago—turn the leaf back fifty years. And, with everybody trying to reform somebody else, and spending yards of print, paper and hours of conversation on the subject, surely somebody ought to have succeeded, or we ought to have a scientific explanation of what becomes of the waste energy.

So one generation or the other must have turned over a new leaf on Jan. 1, 1921. The debate might be settled if we only knew which had done the deed.

Mr. Baruch's Book.

Word has been received from London that Bernard M. Baruch's book, "The Making of the Reparation and Economic Sections of the Treaty," which is published by the Harpers, has gone into a second English edition. The publishers recently received a cable order from a Stockholm publisher for an entire edition of Mr. Baruch's book, printed in English. Arrangements have been made to translate the book into French and Italian.

PUTNAM BOOKS AND AUTHORS

THE PLAY

Most of us have short memories, particularly as far as the theatre is concerned. True, we remember certain situations, perhaps a few brilliant lines, but the most we retain is an impression. The play in book form is a happy perpetuator of all that makes the theatre enjoyable. And for those who cannot see the plays which attract them, the book is a perfect alternative. If the play is worth seeing, the book is worth reading, over and over. Have you thought of owning a library of the drama?

This week Putnams publish two successful New York plays, "Enter Madame," by Gilda Varesi and Dolly Byrne, and "Deburau," by Sacha Guitry.

Enter Madame!

"We are young," says Madame, "you and I are young because we still have imagination, illusion, because we still see people as they are not!" Youth—the very spirit of youth—sings through the pages of "Enter Madame." The brilliant Gilda Varesi makes the pages throb with her personality. Situations unexpected, whimsical, laughable, and a happy and proper ending wherein the wife gets her own way—painlessly. Those who have seen the play and those who have not will find the book a source of constant entertainment. "Enter Madame"—at any bookstore. $1.75.

DEBURAU

David Belasco has produced M. Sacha Guitry's comedy from the French, with marked success in New York. The English translation by H. Granville Barker retains every bit of the sparkling dialogue and the poetic beauty of the French. Deburau, "the marvellous Pierrot of the Theatre des Funambules," finds "that steady, solid, domestic affection which moves like the clock's hands round the disc day by day" a dreadful bore when he meets Marie Duplessis. He then begins his education in the relative value of Art and Love. The Paris of 1839 and the French theatre of the period are faithfully portrayed. "Deburau" as a play is a triumph. In book form it is that—and more. Get "Deburau" at any bookstore. $2.00.

FURTHER E. K. MEANS

Funny title for a book, isn't it? As a matter of fact, really a title—just the name of the one man who has immortalised the Louisiana negro in fiction. Here are seven more of those inimitable stories that made E. K. Means famous. Again we meet those quaint characters, Vinegar Atts, Figger Bush, Skeeter Butts, Mustard Prophet, Tom Gaitskill, and make the acquaintance of some others. By all means read "Further E. K. Means." Everywhere. $2.00.

MIRACLE MONGERS
AND THEIR METHODS By HOUDINI

Johnny Coulon's resistance to the law of gravitation has lately puzzled the scientists of Paris. But Houdini says it is a trick as old that the method of it has been forgotten. In this book he explains how the "magicians" who seem to defy heat and poison, to swallow swords and perform feats of tremendous strength, are able to amaze a puzzled public. It is probably the first authentic explanation from the "inside" of the wonders of the side-show fakers, and certainly a most varied and entertaining book.

France and America

New York Times Book Review and Magazine:

THE recent article in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW AND MAGAZINE on American literature in France was most timely. It might well be supplemented by a few details regarding the French interest in other sections of our national life. It was my privilege last May to deliver a series of lectures on "Representative Americans" at the Sorbonne. Curiously enough, the scholar in charge of these conferences was the Professor Charles Cestre mentioned in your article. As incumbent of the chair on American Civilization and Literature he is doing an exceedingly important work in giving a candid and generous view of the various features of our civilization. In his lectures on the economic conditions of American life, of the relations between capital and labor, of the fostering of good feeling between the heads of our great trusts and the workmen in their employ, I found personally a peculiar interest, for Professor Cestre's first-hand information tended to overthrow the popular fallacy abroad that the American magnates are using the foreign workmen for so much factory fodder. A recent article by Professor Cestre in the Revue Politique et Parlementaire on professional education in America tends in the same direction.

This is what the French are doing. What is further needed is that competent American authorities should present to the French public some clear and authoritative studies on our political system regarding which, as was said in your article, "the French show great ignorance or misconception of facts." For example, one cause for the misunderstanding about President Wilson and his work was that the French mistook the President for a Premier. Another mistake is that they take our political platforms too seriously, whereas, as we know, they are nothing but ground bait to catch the small fry. In regard to my chosen field, philosophy, I was of course much pleased to find that the French knew our speculative tendencies perhaps better than we know them ourselves. For instance, Emile Boutroux, the doyen of French philosophers, has given an absolutely brilliant account of the system of William James, while in the last number of the Revue de Synthese historique, Henri Berr has collated an enormous amount of information in regard to our intellectual activities, from art and economics to literature, philosophy and poetry. This valuable work gives the connective tissue back of such volumes as Jean Richepin's "L'Ame Americaine," a work which is to be found in the windows of almost every bookshop in France. In general it may be said that the air of France is electric with interest regarding things American. That interest of course started with our doughboys. It has now arisen to our intellectual classes, and through such an organization as the International Institute of Education our future scholars will be enabled to carry the message of American civilization across the waters in an adequate way. There is one drawback to this new entente in the Republic of Letters, and that is the high cost of printing in France, and also the alarming shortage in paper. On account of the former, last Spring two learned journals were forced to suspend publication. On account of the latter, as my friend, Xavier Leon, remarked, France is threatened with decapitation.

The Beggar's Opera

ally, and all the women become rivals of Polly Peachum and Lucy Lockit, two wives with but a single thought between them.

With them, every woman is a conspirator to save so admirable a creature from the law and the minions thereof at the self-same time that each in secret sympathized with the perfidy of Jenny Diver and her crew of less loved ladies, Jenny, who betrayed him with a kiss, a pistol and a song and set the minions of the law upon him to lead him to Newgate gaol. Not for a price she did the deed (though the hussy certainly did not refuse the blood money), but out of jealousy and pique because of the man's irresistible and incorrigible inconstancy.

It is the subtlest fascination of the highwayman that he must be both loved and hated by the sex that is most apt at doing both by turns or together. That rounds out his incomparable equipment as the perfect stage hero. Mr. Gay's Captain Macheath, the perfect pattern of a highwayman—crook and ladies' man, too—is inevitably the perfect stage hero. And Mr. Gay's piece comes as near as possible to being the perfect pattern of the eternal crook play.

Never mind the fact that Mr. Gay wrote the thing in Mr. Pope's cottage at Twickenham—the place we used to read about when we boned English literature as such. Never mind the fact that Mr. Dean Swift (whose Gulliver, duly expurgated, delighted our youthful imagination with giants and lilliputians and highly articulate horses) told Mr. Gay to write it. Never mind that a sour puritanical divine (who subsequently became an Archbishop) denounced the piece 192 years ago quite as the Rev. Dr. Straton might have done yesterday. Never mind that the popularity of the performance extinguished Italian opera in England for a generation. Forget that Hogarth—memorable to most of us merely because he aspired to draw both ends of a barrel in the same perspective—painted pictures of the scenes and made the first drawings of the opera.

All that is interesting, but not important.

But—if you are one of those simple souls who love a good crook play, get you to "The Beggar's Opera" and leave your antiquarian lore behind you. It will do no harm, if you happen to have a taste for good music, to take that baggage along, and while Nigel Playfair's English company holds the boards a taste for right diction and good acting will not be in your way either.

Even so charming and magical a bit as Jenny Diver's Judas song—endearingly delivered by Miss Nonny Lock—cannot spoil your primary and primitive pleasure in the crook play as such.

But here is the song that Jenny Diver sings:

Before the Barn-Door crowing,
The Cock by Hens attended,
His Eyes around him throwing,
Stands for a while suspended.
Then one he singles from the Crew,
And cheers the happy Hen;
With a how do you do, and how do you do,
And how do you do again?"

Bolshevism as I Saw It

tiated, for bourgeois show. Why aren't the children in school? Why are there so many beggars wandering on the boulevard? Why are there people thrown out of employment and unable to find work?"

To which he would reply:

"We can't do everything in a minute; give us time."

I gave him time—because I had to, since I was not allowed to leave. I stayed on, and saw looting done under the name of requisition. I saw a friend lose three or four pieces of handsome furniture because a Bolshevist officer wanted it. Doubtless he was "honest" in his craving. I speak with bitterness, because the Bolsheviki took away from me six beautiful rugs that I had bought in Persia. I had the proof in writing that they had not been bought in Bolshevist territory. The "honest" Bolsheviki so far have made no attempt to recompense me. But that sort of thing might happen to anyone.

All I mean is this: that for eight weeks I saw the Bolshevist Government running; the one thing it did efficiently was hold down the soldiers and keep the people under. The Tcheza-vodchika did a lot of judging, sentencing and executing. For the rest, committees and commissars were constantly changing; there was no end of meetings and elections and talk-fests; there was a lot of propaganda about the fall of the bourgeoisie and the rise of the workingman. But in that eight weeks I saw many workmen and soldiers who asked what they had gained in the new Soviet. And the answer was that, for the present at least, they had exchanged freedom for a tyranny.

Perhaps I expected things to come too quickly; but allowing for that, I am sure the Government in Azerbaijan was muddling and dictatorial; that there was much misery, and that even at the end of eight weeks the people would far rather have been as they were. Maybe if Lenin and Trotsky could have come down and done each individual job themselves, the thing would have been a success. Maybe the theory is right enough and that only fallible human instruments are wrong. But fallible human instruments are all there is to work with. At any rate, when I finally got away from Baku, I felt that whoever was under Soviet rule was under a shadow.

SOMETIMES the oldest way, and the most effective, to bring out the contrast between two periods is to quote significant expressions of opinion from competent observers, one of whom is as representative of the earlier period as the other is of the later. Possibly the difference between the plays of native authorship produced in our theatres sixty and seventy years ago and those which we are now privileged to see can be shown sharply by the juxtaposition of half a dozen lines of pointed verse with a passage of delicate prose.

When Anna Cora Mowatt brought out her five-act piece "Fashion," perhaps the most estimable attempt at "high comedy" to be credited to any American author prior to 1870, the rhymed prologue was written by Epes Sargent. Here are the couplets that best reveal what Sargent held to be the attitude of his time toward any dramatic effort which was not imported from Great Britain:

"Fashion, A Comedy." I'll go—but stay—
Now I read further, 'tis a native play!
Bah! Home-made calicoes are well enough,
But home-made dramas must be stupid stuff.
Had it the London stamp 'twould do—but then
For plays we lack the manners and the men.

At the dinner given to Howells on his seventy-fifth birthday he made a speech in which he took stock of American literature in the three-score years of his penetrating observation. He said that the growth of the American play was scarcely less wonderful than the growth of the American novel:

I had greatly admired the modern English drama with hardly a question of superiority to ours, but last Summer when I was expressing my high sense of it to an Englishman in London, he said, "Yes, but you know you are doing much better things at home," and though he gave me no instance, he set me thinking; and I thought I perceived that in their very difference from the English things which I had so admired there was that which at least equaled our things with theirs. I thought I saw that while the English dramatists painted manners so wonderfully well, ours painted nature, our everyday American nature, which at the bottom of its heart is always human nature. If they did not paint manners so well, it was perhaps because we had none to paint, or, perhaps, because our customs, which we make do for manners, change so rapidly from day to day. * * * Now already we have a drama which has touched our life at many characteristic points, which has dealt with our moral and material problems and penetrated psychological regions which it seemed impossible an art so objective should reach. Mainly it has been gay as our prevalent mood is; mainly it has been honest as our habit is, in cases where we believe we can afford it; mainly it has been decent and clean and sweet as our average life is; and now that Ibsen no longer writes new plays, I would rather take my chance of pleasure and profit with a new American play than with any other sort of new play.

I confess that this is a long quotation to make from an author not under review; but I proffer no apology for it. I feel that it is its own justification; it is so clear and so sane, so delicately discriminating and so slyly humorous. And it needed to be said, as it is needed to be cited here, so that we may see how far the drama in America had advanced in 1912, when these words were uttered, from what it had been in 1845, when the prologue to "Fashion" was first spoken. Look on this picture and on this—both of them painted from life.

Two other points may also be made. First, we now export more plays than we import. Second, we now read plays in the library as well as go to see them in the theatre. And either of these things would have seemed impossible to the contemporaries of Mrs. Mowatt and Epes Sargent. Until 1890 or 1870 our theatres were given over almost entirely to the British dramatists, living and dead. From 1870 to 1890 we borrowed copiously from the French dramatists and even from the German. Now and again American characters were attempted and sometimes not unsuccessfully, but almost always in plays of lamentably feeble construction, artificial, arbitrary, unreal. Mose, the New York fireman; Solon Shingle, the Yankee farmer; Kit, the Arkansas traveler; Bardwell Slote, the uncouth Congressman; Colonel Sellers, the impecunious promoter, all lived, moved and had their being in stories almost as false as they were flimsy.

Today, in the first year of the third decade of this twentieth century, our playwrights know their trade. They are expert workmen. They know how to build a plot, how to people it with human beings, how to arouse the attention of the audience, to retain it and to satisfy it. During the war the most popular plays in London had been transplanted from New York. And even earlier than the war, Clyde Fitch's "Truth" had established itself in the theatres of Germany and of Italy. I recall his telling me once that the performance of this play which had best pleased him was one he had seen in Rome. Of course, we still gladly welcome foreign plays; we want to see the best that is to be had, no matter in what language it may have been originally written; but we are now in nowise dependent on the imported play; and the most successful pieces are nearly always home-made.

"Now that Ibsen no longer writes new plays, I would rather take my chance of pleasure and profit with a new American play than with any other sort of new play."

Today we have at least begun to acquire the habit of reading plays—a habit unknown in the mid-years of the nineteenth century, and unknown because there were being written in our language mighty few pieces that were worth reading—and because such plays as did get themselves into print were issued in unattractive "acting editions" with the stage directions condensed into the theatrical shorthand which was to be understood and interpreted only by the initiated, e. g., "Mary enters D. in F. sees John standing by table L. C. She runs R. U. E., as Higgins enters D. 2d E. L." The American dramatist today aims, of course, at success on the stage, first of all; but he hopes also for a hearing in the study, and to that end he writes out his stage directions for the benefit of his readers, doing his best to make them see for themselves—in their mind's eye, so to speak—the actions that speak louder than words.

This may seem a needlessly elaborate introduction to a consideration of two volumes of American plays. But neither of these volumes would have been published fifty years ago. They could not have been published because the American plays to fill them did not then exist. The five plays collected in the volume edited by Professor Baker and the three plays written by Mr. Forbes are all by American authors and they all deal with American life. The late Laurence Hutton once risked the definition of a truly American play as a piece written by an American, in America, on an American theme; and he promptly admitted that this definition was too narrow when it was pointed out to him that a corresponding definition of an English play would exclude the Danish "Hamlet," the Italian "Romeo and Juliet" and the Roman "Julius Caesar." Yet to us Americans a play is undoubtedly more appealing when it deals with American life and presents American characters. Such a play may best perform one of the most important purposes of fiction, in that it helps us to understand one another; it explains us to ourselves.

The five plays which Professor Baker has included in his solid little volume are Augustus Thomas's "As a Man Thinks," David Belasco's "Return of Peter Grimm," Edward Sheldon's "Romance," Mr. Anspacher's "man" and "Plots and P... have all proved ... they are all rea... three of the fi... reading. time when it was dangerously low; suppose we agree that the experimentation was bungling. Suppose we agree that the shortened working day, and the payment for work by the hour was disorganizing to the politically ignorant masses. The answer to that is that this was three years ago, and that the Bolsheviki may have learned a good deal in the meantime about running work and workmen. But have they? I'll tell you presently what I know about that.

Mr. Wells says that the Communist Party is the only possible Government in Russia at the present time; that it embodies an idea and can be relied on to stand by its idea; that so far it is a thing morally higher than anything that has come against it; that it has set up a crude rationing system; that it is honest. The general impression one gathers from his articles is that the Bolshevist system is workable.

I will tell you how it worked in the Republic of Azerbaijan. If you have looked into your geography lately, you know that Azerbaijan is that stretch of territory just west of the Caspian Sea, bounded on the north by Russia, on the south by Persia and on the west by the republic of Georgia. (That is, it is the republic of Georgia as I write; tomorrow it may be made a Soviet republic, as was its sister, Azerbaijan.) The inhabitants of Azerbaijan are said to have come originally from Central Asia. The majority of them are Moslems of Tartar and Turkish blood. Once their country was independent; then it belonged to Persia; something like a hundred years ago Russia annexed it. When the attempt, under Kerensky, to make a republic of Transcaucasia failed, Azerbaijan broke away with its 5,000,000 of people and in 1918 its national council proclaimed a republic, Kahn Khosky, a Tartar (recently murdered in Georgia by Bolsheviks), being made President.

The little republic got on very well indeed, so far as its ministries and organizations were concerned. As to the rest, there has always been bad feeling between the Christians and the Moslems. An Englishwoman, married to an Armenian in Baku, told me that in the sixteen years of her married life she had seen five massacres in the city of Baku. So perhaps both for reasons spiritual (save the mark!) and reasons physical, Azerbaijan was made for trouble. The physical reasons are the oil wells. With Russia starving for oil, how could the little republic dream that the Bolsheviki would keep their hands off? For over two years they had their agents within Baku spreading propaganda and winning over the thousands of workingmen. In the late Spring they made a sort of armistice with Azerbaijan, setting aside fifteen days when they should discuss trade relations. Then, when Azerbaijan was off guard, they came down and took her with an armored train and a handful of soldiers.

They came in, remember, to a republic that was getting on well enough, aside from massacres; that is, there was sufficient food and sufficient work; shops were open and doing well; the educational system for Christians and Moslems alike was satisfactory. The Near East Relief was feeding Armenian and Russian and Moslem refugees. I began to wonder what reason the Bolsheviki would give for coming; so, after a few days, in the intervals of trying to get away from them, I asked them why they had taken Azerbaijan.

The first person I addressed was a real communist—I mean an honest one, an idealist.

"Why did we come?" he replied; "because we are going to convert the whole world to Soviet rule—by the sword, if necessary. Azerbaijan was the first area in our path."

The next person I asked was a Bolshevist Colonel.

"Why did the Bolsheviki take Azerbaijan?" he repeated in exquisite English. "My dear lady, I can't tell you, because I have only been a Bolshevik about four weeks. I haven't learned yet what the theory of taking it was; I did what I was told to do, that was my reason. I fought faithfully when I was in Denikin's army, and after I was taken prisoner and told by the Reds that I was now a Bolshevik, I fought faithfully for the new régime. But you will have to excuse me from giving reasons. I can find out what they say, if you like."

My interpreter translated briefly what a soldier said when I asked him why the Bolsheviki had come in.

"Tell the American lady," he replied, "that the soldiers are fighting for Russia. There has always been a greater Russia; there must always be a greater Russia. The soldiers took Azerbaijan because it really belonged to Russia."

"Ask him," I said, "if the soldiers are going on to take all the other countries and make them Soviet."

"Tell the lady," he replied, "that when we have greater Russia we are going home. Let the other countries make Soviets if they want to, but we are not going to fight to do it. It is a long time since we were in our own homes."

The last person I asked was a Jew who had a high position as commissar. He was a Communist. He was one of those that seemed able to get what he liked. He had a car, when other commissars walked, and it was said that his rooms were very richly furnished with requisitioned furniture.

"Madame," he said, "it was not an accident that we first conquered the territory that held the oil wells."

I am sure Mr. Wells would call him "honest," at least in his speech.

Now I'll tell you how the Soviet worked during the eight weeks I was there. Perhaps I expected too much, but I did think that within a few days things would be running at least as well as they had before. The Bolsheviki had had more than two years' experience at making Soviets; they ought to be able to run a little place of 5,000,000 so as not to interfere with the welfare and happiness of the people. The people, on the whole, were willing to receive them; at least they put up red flags; and those who had already had experience of Bolshevik rule, families who had come down from the Volga regions to get away from Bolshevism—they fell silent, and began to consider, secretly, how they could run away again.

The first thing the Bolsheviki did was to establish a revolutionary or war committee under Huseinof, and later under Narimanoff, both Tartars, and Narimanoff really an honest man, an idealist, and much beloved by all who knew him. Then they established the Country-Revolutionary Committee, or Tchesvodchika, supposed to suppress speculation in the people's food, all revolts, all spying and similar crimes.

The function of the Revolutionary Committee was to rule the new territory until councils could be elected by workmen, soldiers and peasants, who would then take over the civil government. But the Tchesvodchika (which is as near as I can spell the word) was to work all the time, and it did. At once it began to concern itself with arrests, court-martials and executions. It was a large committee, composed mostly of Bolsheviki who had come down from Moscow and Astrakhan. Men and women they were, and mostly young. There was one girl of 17 who was a member.

I have seen a good many of those members of the Tchesvodchika. A good many of them had never had any power in their hands till a few months ago. It seems to me as if I'd rather be tried for my life by some old seasoned Judge that had had plenty of experience. A young man would be too likely to say, "She's probably guilty, and, anyway, she looks like a bourgeois. Tomorrow at sunrise. Next case."

"My dear lady, I can't tell you, because I have only been a Bolshevik about four weeks."

At any rate, some of the executions must have come from judgments as summary as that, given by people drunk perhaps with power, certainly lacking in experience and probably in imagination.

After they got their two committees going the Bolsheviki began sending the oil up into Russia. Baku was reeking with oil. Many of the wells were not producing because there were no more containers left. The pipeline that communicated with Batum and supplied the British with a certain amount of oil the Bolsheviki naturally cut. They took some cotton that belonged to an American firm and sent that north. Perhaps some recompense will be made for it. They delighted the common people by announcing in their two newspapers that they had nationalized the oil wells and the land and the banks and that they had rationed the food. There was no killing on the streets, there was no looting of shops. It is true that if a soldier was drunk he got five years' imprisonment, and if he was caught stealing he was shot. We were told that all governmental departments were working smoothly and that the Russians and the Tartars were getting on beautifully together.

Only too soon there were evidences of the "general inefficiency in Russia" of which Mr. Wells speaks; of the "amateurish government." And everywhere the people began secretly to complain—except the few who were able to graft. The Bolsheviki had learned one thing: that workingmen could not have a short day if work was to be done quickly. So the workers who had expected to have six or eight hours at the most had a stint of ten or twelve, with the obligation of also giving a few hours a week on Saturday afternoon or Sunday for public work for the good of the Soviet—such as the repair of roads. They did not like it. Nor did they like the constant executions, and their grumbling was so loud that first the Government explained at great length in its newspapers why certain executions had been carried out, and later announced that no public announcements of executions would be made. Arbitrary ruling, more like autocracy than anything else, one would say.

They established wages—0,000 rubles a month for the lowest and 10,000 for the highest. But this was not equality; some people grumbled. More of them grumbled because the wages would not cover the cost of their necessities. They did, indeed, receive some rations, soldiers and workmen; a workman's wife, if she cared to stand in line from two to eight hours, might buy black bread at 3 rubles a pound. But suppose she was too busy to spare the time, or too sickly to stand, then she had to pay 16. When I left white bread cost 150 rubles a pound, meat close to 200; tea, 3,000; stockings, from 1,000 to 3,000, and shoes from 12,000 to 16,000 rubles a pair.

When the Government sternly rationed the shops, the shop keepers sequestered their goods, and when a Russian entered the shop, he was told that this and that was out of stock. People with clothes or shoes or jewelry were willing to sell, but those who had food were determined not to abide by the rationing decisions. If I went into a Tartar shop, I could buy anything I wanted, provided no Russian was there at the same time.

The American Near East Relief people were feeding hundreds of orphans and needy mothers. The Bolsheviki sealed up this United States food, and it was three weeks before it was released. For two days the relief agent was allowed to use it, and then a new committee came and sealed it up again. It was still sealed, I believe, when I got away. The relief was given for more than three days, but that was because the assistant, Clyde Smith, managed to hide several sacks of flour and boxes of condensed milk. That was one example of muddling, and in connection with the very people the Bolsheviki aim to protect—children and mothers. Then there was this, further, in connection with the children: many of the buildings which the Bolsheviki requisitioned for their public offices were schools. Thus during the end of April, May and June, various classes of children were kept out of school.

I protested at this to a Bolshevist friend. I said to him, "You say you are going to have a beautiful Children's Building. Why haven't you got it, when this and that commissar can have splendid suites of offices, whole groups of unneeded rooms. Just, it would seem to the unini-

American Novels in Paper Covers

New York Times Book Review and Magazine:

SINCE THE NEW YORK TIMES has greatly influenced a new publishing experiment, there is due to the readers of that great newspaper an explanation of the nature of the experiment, with the reasons why it is made.

During the discussion and correspondence conducted by THE NEW YORK TIMES some months ago as to the need of novels in paper covers, we appreciated the fact that many of the correspondents who urged American publishers to issue paper-covered novels in the French manner did not understand American book-publishing conditions and exaggerated the amount of saving that could be effected through binding in paper instead of in cloth. On the other hand, it seemed to us that the answers of certain bookmen, who pointed out how little difference in price could be made between cloth and paper bindings, did not take quite all the elements of cost into consideration and that the saving might be more than they indicated. Then came the editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES suggesting that the matter called for further experiment and study—a suggestion that impressed us as sound and reasonable.

Immediately it became evident that a satisfactory experiment could not be made with novels of limited sale and that the experiments already made with such books need not be taken as conclusive. Only with an important novel by a well-known writer could the experiment be conducted with any hope of getting satisfactory answers to the questions that raise so much doubt. We then decided to try out the idea with "The Sisters-in-Law," a new novel by Mrs. Atherton, to be published Jan. 28. The established reputation of the author, our past experience in the sales of her books, and the fact that the large circle of her readers is well distributed throughout the country and through many classes of people are factors that contribute to a real test.

There remained the question as to what difference could be made between the retail prices of the cloth-bound and paper-bound editions. After most careful figuring, we found that if the cloth-bound volume could be sold for $2 at retail, a reduction of 50 cents in price was possible for the edition in paper covers. The returns to author, bookseller and publisher, respectively, are the same on the sale of four copies of the paper edition at $1.50 as on the sale of three copies of the cloth edition at $2. We are issuing the book in both styles, and hope that the results of this trial will answer conclusively the question as to whether or not paper-bound novels will find favor with American book buyers.

It seems possible, and even probable, that the future course of American publishers will be determined by the results of this experiment. So far all indications from booksellers are that the paper-covered novel will not find favor. Only the public can decide whether the booksellers are right or wrong, and this time the public will have the opportunity of buying either style at a substantial difference in price.

The difference of 25 per cent. in price is, in our opinion, the maximum that can be expected in the case of the vast majority of books offered to the public. Comparison with French prices before the war is useless, since every essential factor is radically different. The labor cost of a French novel was but a small proportion of the labor cost in America. The quality of paper was inferior to that used here and the other expenses of publishing and selling novels were all in favor of the French. Furthermore, most French novels were much shorter than most American novels, sometimes only half the average length of the novels here. Since the war the retail price of French novels in America is not so far below the price we have put on the new Atherton novel, and if difference in length and quality of manufacture is considered, the present prices of French novels are not appreciably lower.

Before deciding to attempt this experiment, which is one that has not previously been tried with the work of such a prominent American author, we consulted Mrs. Atherton, who gave the plan her cordial approval and expressed much enthusiasm over it, with keen interest in its results upon American publishing and bookselling.

This Simian World

THIS SIMIAN WORLD. By Clarence Day, Jr. With illustrations by the author. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $1.50.

THERE are many pessimists who persist in running down the human race; they detach themselves with a superb gesture from their fellows and view mankind in general with profound dissatisfaction. After reading "This Simian World" one is convinced that these critics do not make sufficient allowance for the amount of monkey blood in our veins. With Mr. Day we agree that in view of our simian descent we have done very well. Were we descended from tigers, cows, or bees, we might expect to find ourselves possessed of different characteristics, but "cousins of the Bandarlog" cannot help show signs of their kinship.

First simian trait of all is our love of chattering. We regard the right to chatter as an inalienable privilege, and take full advantage of this privilege on all possible occasions.

There were other possible rulers for the earth besides a race of su ermonkeys, or a race of super-cats. Suppose the elephants had proved themselves masters in the early prehistoric battles, what would society have been like today? Certainly it would not be a society infected by the speed mania as is ours. The elephant people would be a ponderous, easy-going lot, tolerant and humane, and probably rather stupid.

How would a race of super-cows, or super-bees have evolved? What would have been the social structure of an ant world? Mr. Day gravely discusses these important matters, and his little book contains much sound philosophy hidden beneath a cloak of humor. Every one will laugh as he reads "This Simian World," and not a few will find in it food for serious study.

One comforting thought remains. Our simian ancestors were victors in the great dynastic struggles of the far-off past. We can be proud of that, and we should not be ungrateful and deny the ancestry of those who bequeathed us the earth. The sentiment of Barbellion, quoted by Mr. Day, is the only one that is worthy of us.

How I hate the man who talks about the 'brute creation,' with an ugly emphasis on brute. * * * As for me, I am proud of my close kinship with other animals. I take a jealous pride in my simian ancestry. I like to think that I was once a magnificent hairy fellow living in the trees, and that my frame has come down through geological time via sea jelly and worms and amphioxus, fish, dinosaurs and apes. Who would exchange these for the pallid couple in the Garden of Eden?

You know that it belongs to the young Marquis de Burgos, but perhaps you don't realize that he is the Don Arturo I sometimes spoke of in my letters. He has loved me a long time. Tonight I decided to remain with him because I came to see that if I gave him up and went back to you I would be too unhappy to live."
Fate intervenes to save Elsie Maury, and a situation fresh in fiction thus arises.

The General Staff and Its Problems
By GENERAL LUDENDORFF In two volumes
A revelation by original documents, reports of secret conferences, confidential correspondence, etc., between the Emperor, Hindenburg, Ludendorff, the German Foreign Office, etc., of the relations between the High Command and the Imperial German Government at the critical period of the war.
The World describes these documents as:—
"An essential part of the story of German defeat. They are history as it was made at the throbbing centre of Teutonic calculation and dispute."
The Times points out that:—
"Nothing has budged Ludendorff from the belief that he would have won the war for Germany if that Government and people had acted as he demanded."
In view of the spirit prevalent in Germany to which attention has recently been called by so eminent an authority as J. Ellis Barker, the publication of these documents in Germany constitutes an influence which should be thoroughly understood and its effects studied in America.

Books and Authors

READERS who were charmed with the beautiful prose and fascinating contents of Frederick O'Brien's "White Shadows in the South Seas" will welcome the news that the eagerly awaited second book by the same author will be brought out this Spring by the Century Company. "Mystic Atolls of the South Seas," as the second volume is entitled, covers wider ground than the first book, but its pages are compact with the same romance and beauty that made "White Shadows in the South Seas" such a delightful adventure.

New York theatregoers will next season have an opportunity to witness a dramatic version of Edith Wharton's "The Age of Innocence." According to an announcement just received from D. Appleton & Co., publishers of this novel, negotiations are well under way for the production of a play based upon the book.

In addition to the large domestic sales of Sinclair Lewis's "Main Street," Harcourt, Brace & Howe, publishers of the novel, announce that separate editions have also been sold to England, Canada and Australia.

D. Appleton & Co. announce that Zona Gale's novel, "Miss Lulu Bett," is selling in greater numbers at the present than at any time since its publication nearly a year ago. The enduring demand for the book has doubtless been stimulated by the success with which the dramatic version has met on the stage.

Walter Pritchard Eaton, whose latest book, "In Berkshire Fields," is among the recent publications of Harper & Brothers, is again conducting classes in dramatic and literary criticism at the Pulitzer School of Journalism.

Harcourt, Brace & Howe will publish in time for the convention which the National Woman's Party will hold in Washington on Feb. 15 in celebration of the 101st anniversary of the birthday of Susan B. Anthony "The Woman's Party," by Ines Haynes Irwin. This authorized history of the struggle for the suffrage contains much inside history showing how women resorted to political strategy, as well as character sketches of the women leaders of the movement.

A. Frederick Collins's versatility is indicated by the widely divergent characters of three books by him recently published by Frederick A. Stokes Company. These are "Jack Heaton, Oil Prospector," a story for boys; "Farm and Garden Tractors" and "Wonders of Natural History." Mr. Collins is at present engaged in writing his thirty-fifth book, a popular treatise on "Spinning Tops and Gyroscopes."

John Lane & Co. will next month publish "Shadows," a book of prose, sketches and stories by Alma Newton.

"The State and Government," by James Quayle Dealey, Professor of Social and Political Science in Brown University, which D. Appleton & Co. announce for publication this week, considers the problems of government from the viewpoint of sociology rather than from the more common standpoint of the law.

Bertrand Russell, whose analysis of Bolshevism was recently published by Harcourt, Brace & Howe under the title "Bolshevism: Practice and Theory," is now in China studying political and social conditions in the Orient.

Bernard M. Baruch recently received from the Hon. L. S. Rowe a complimentary letter in which the Director General of the Pan-American Union wrote: "I have just completed reading your admirable book, 'The Making of the Reparation and Economic Sections of the Treaty,' published by the Harpers, and want to express a deep sense of obligation for the enlightenment which you have furnished to the American people in setting forth the situation with such masterly clearness."

Major Ian Hay Beith has just returned to London from a lecture tour of Scotland, and is now hard at work rehearsing "The Safety Match" at the Strand Theatre in the English metropolis. The play is a dramatization of the novelist-playwright's book of the same title, which was published in this country by Houghton Mifflin Company.

The December issue of the Bodleian, which is published at the Bodley Head by the John Lane Company, prints on its front cover the following parody of Kipling's "The Long Trail":

LITTLE BO-PEEP.

There's a whimper in the field where a shepherdess has quenied
For her sheep that are off on the run:
"Hi! Rover there, come over, for the flock has quit the clover,
And we've lost them, every one."

You can hear the bleat of the young-est ewe
As she seeks her roving dam;
You can see the tail—how frail!—how frail!—
That hangs from the smallest ram.

Ha' done with the tears that are vain, dear lass,
Cast out the fear that is blind;
For they'll each come back with a whole tail, its own tail, its sole tail,
They'll all come home with a Plain Tale—that a tail it is worn be-hind.

The parody is taken from "The Poets in the Nursery," by Charles Powell, which has an introduction by John Drinkwater.

Enos A. Mills, the naturalist-author whose "Waiting in the Wilderness," published by Houghton Mifflin Company, is reviewed elsewhere in these columns, has left his home on Long's Peak for a visit in the East. He will lecture in Boston and in Providence, and on his way westward again, in Cleveland and Detroit.

Zane Grey, whose latest novel, "The Mysterious Rider," was published by the Harpers early this month, is now in New York and in almost daily conference with his publishers. Mr. Grey's home is in California.

Miss Anzia Yezierska, whose collection of short stories about immigrants, "Hungry Hearts," is published by Houghton Mifflin Company, has arranged to give a series of readings from her book under the auspices of the New York Board of Education.

Rudyard Kipling's poem, "If," which Lord Kitchener included in the manual of instruction used by his "first hundred thousand," has, according to the records of Doubleday, Page & Co., been translated into 125 languages, including many of the more obscure tongues.

The credit always given to "Old Tinsley," the publisher, for "discovering" Thomas Hardy is somewhat dimmed by the statement made in A. Edward Newton's "The Amenities of Book-Collecting" (John Lane Company) to the effect that the distinguished English novelist had to put up £75 toward the cost of bringing out his first story, "Desperate Remedies." Mr. Newton, by the way, counts among his most cherished possessions a letter from Mr. Hardy anent the marriage of Mrs Thrale to Piozzi, in which the author says:

"I am in full sympathy with Mrs. Thrale under the painful opposition to her marriage with Piozzi. The single excuse for Johnson's letter to her on that occasion would be that he was her lover himself and hoped to win her, otherwise it was simply brutal.

Czechish readers have long been familiar with the work of Walt Whitman. One of the earliest translations into the Czech language from American sources was that of "Leaves of Grass," which was made by Jaroslov Vrchlicky, an indefatigible worker, who translated also the "Divine Comedy," "Orlando Furioso" and many works from French, Hebrew, Yiddish and Chinese, in addition to being the author of much original writing.

The present crime wave lends more than ordinary interest to Burdette G. Lewis's study of crime prevention and the treatment of criminals, published by Harper & Brothers under the title, "The Offender." Mr. Lewis, who is Commissioner of Institutions and Agencies, at Trenton, N. J., said in a recent letter to the editor of a New York newspaper: "Burglary, robbery and breaking and entering are just as much professions in certain well-defined groups in our cities as are carpentry, bridge building and plumbing among other groups in these same cities."

A number of French literary and public men have set afoot a movement to erect a statue to Alan Seeger, the young American poet who gave his life to France in the war. Seeger's "Poems" and his "Letters and Diary" are published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

"Figures of Earth," the first book written by James Branch Cabell since "Jurgen," is to be brought out next month by Robert M. McBride & Co. The book is the story of marvelous adventures in the legendary country of Poictesme, in his appraisal of the magazine fiction of 1920 Edward J. O'Brien has three-starred five of Cabell's stories. These five stories represent Mr. Cabell's entire fiction output for the year, and are one greater in number than the similarly honored total of any other writer.

Advertising men will find much to interest them in "Attention Value of Advertisements," a detailed report of an experiment conducted by George B. Hotchkiss, Professor of Advertising and Marketing in New York University, and Richard B. Franken, lecturer on the same subject, in measuring the relative attention secured by the various advertisements printed in a single issue of The Saturday Evening Post. The summary of the investigation was prepared under the auspices of the New York University Bureau of Business Research, and is published in pamphlet form by the Graduate School of Business Administration of that university.

Knut Hamsun's play, "Queen Tamara," written in 1903, was recently given an initial production in Germany. The performance took place at the Landestheater, in Darmstadt.

"Enter Madame," Gilda Varesi's play, which is enjoying such a protracted run on Broadway, is now available in book form. It is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, with an introduction by Alexander Woollcott.

The London Times states that the Soviet Government has abolished the right to private ownership of books. All existing libraries have been requisitioned by the State, and in future it will be illegal for any individual to acquire or own a book. "As scarce as a Russian bibliophile" doubtless takes the place of "as scarce as hen's teeth" in current Moscow parlance.

"O. Henry never had the slightest intention, hope or fear of his poem, 'The Crucible,' being incorporated in 'Lo.'" The above positive statement was recently made by Franklin P. Adams, who collaborated with O. Henry on the musical comedy mentioned, and is certainly entitled to the last word on the origin of the much-discussed verse.

Recasting the Book of Job

THE BOOK OF JOB. Its Origin, Growth and Interpretation, Together with a New Translation Based on a Revised Text. By Morris Jastrow Jr., Professor in the University of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia and London: J. B. Lippincott Company. $3.

PROFESSOR JASTROW'S "Book of Job" is as daring an essay in the higher criticism of the Bible as any one has attempted. If it is satisfactory to inquirers, then it must be completely satisfactory, for it undertakes to answer all the questions that have been raised about this book, and they are many. He has a theory, one which he maintains is the only one which fits the facts and leaves no inquiry unanswered. No one can deny that Professor Jastrow's book is written in a powerful and vivid style, although here and there it is just a bit too colloquial. And the new translation, mainly in poetic form with a prose introduction, is beautiful.

Literary unity and the very idea of authorship, the author tells us, were unknown in the Orient until that region had come under the spell of Greek culture. In other words the Orient had not conceived the idea that any book was to be considered as the work of a single author, or that he had any property in it. Other critics have not hesitated to separate parts of books from other parts and to declare that the man whose name appears as the author did not write these parts, and even that he manifestly had no knowledge of them, since centuries of wars divided the two or more sections from each other. It is doubtful if any of them has exceeded, or if any but German professors have equaled, Professor Jastrow in not only recasting a given book but writing its history with an air of certainty.

Having done this, he is entitled to his day in court. To say that he shows audacity is not to intimate that he is to be deprived of a hearing; for if he can indeed accomplish such results he has done a wonderful thing. If he has not, he is of course prepared to pay the penalty. He undertakes, then, not only to recast the Book of Job but to account for its origin. It was taken from a folk-tale so old that its origin is lost in the mists of antiquity, and it was not originally a Jewish folk-tale, as is shown not only by the statement in the book itself that Job lived in Uz, a country to the east of Palestine, but by the much better internal evidence that neither Job nor any of his three friends had Jewish names. If you say that Job had four, and that Elihu is a Jewish name, Professor Jastrow's answer is that Elihu's argument is an interpolation, inserted to make the book orthodox.

It was not a drama nor intended to be one, he tells us, for there is not the necessary unity, and this is why attempts to present it on the stage have always failed. After the preliminary account of the folk-tale from which it sprung, the poem begins, and instead of being a drama it is a symposium, quite different in spirit from the original legend. Professor Jastrow calculates that it was written about the year 200, which was part of an age of intellectual unrest. He imagines a group of free and relentless thinkers, whose minds had been perplexed by the question: Does God permit the innocent to suffer pain and the wicked to prosper, and if so, can he be called a merciful God?

This group, or "circle" as Professor Jastrow prefers to call them, put their debates into the form of a poetic symposium, in which the skeptic Job has decidedly the best of it. There is nothing supernatural about the symposium, God does not appear in it, Job does not admit his mistake. In fact, as Professor Jastrow sees it, the book ends on quite another key. Its climax comes when, after the friends have exhausted their eloquence, Job silences them with the unanswerable question, "Who can win a suit against God?"

This, then, is the skeptical victory recorded in the symposium. The final editors, however they may have cut and added, have, Professor Jastrow says, "preserved the proof that the book at one time terminated with the thirty-first chapter, where we actually read: 'The words of Job are ended.'" It will not do, he maintains, to interpret this phrase as merely meaning that Job makes no more speeches, both because there would be no special reason for mentioning this and because Job actually does go on talking. Even before this ending of the words of Job there had been interpolations of whole chapters. Contrary to the current view, the author says, there had been no progressive development from the same theme; there had been only "variations on a few melodies."

As the book itself tells us, "These three men ceased answering Job," and Elihu suddenly begins. Professor Jastrow tells us over and over again that these additions to the Book of Job implied no moral wrong on the part of those who made them; no one living in their time would have dreamed of doubting their right to put their side of the case into a book, for a book was not property. It would perhaps have been even thought wrong for them, having the power to set forth the case for orthodoxy, to fail in doing it. At all events, Elihu the Buzite, given the poem the sacred character which was wanting in the skeptical Job of Uz, and thereby preserved it for us; since it would never have been in the canon if it had retained its skeptical tone, and probably would have perished with other non-religious books. The speeches of Elihu constitute an appendix to the book, and there is another appendix, "consisting," says our author, "of Chapters 38 to 41, and purporting to be speeches addressed by Yahweh to Job." They are nature poems, and do not touch upon the problem that forms the central theme in the original book. "If it were not," says Professor Jastrow, "for the attachment of this magnificent series of poems to the Book of Job, no reader would for a moment have associated the poems with the theme suggested by Job's experience."

The speeches of Elihu, he says, show at a glance their composite character. Chapter 32 is taken up with a series of draft introductions, which he considers to be evidence of various independent speeches. The first and third speeches are addressed to Job, the second to his friends, and the fourth is supplemental to nobody.

"When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy."—Job, 38:7.
By William Blake.

Portions of this chapter of the Authorized Version are given as might be taken as composite character speeches, are as follows:

2. Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu, the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram: against Job was his wrath kindled, because he justified himself rather than God.

3. Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, because they had found no answer, and yet had condemned Job.

4. Now Elihu had waited till they had spoken to Job, because they were elder than he.

5. When Elihu saw that there was no answer in the mouth of these men, then his wrath was kindled.

6. And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I am young, and ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, and durst not show you mine opinion.

7. I said, Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.

8. But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.

9. Great men are not always wise: neither do the aged understand judgment.

10. Therefore, I said, Hearken to me; I also will show mine opinion.

11. Behold, I waited for your words; I gave ear to your reasons, whilst ye searched out what to say.

12. Yea, I attended unto you, and, behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words:

13. Lest ye should say, We have found out wisdom: God thrusteth him down, not man.

14. Now he hath not directed his words against me: neither will I answer him with your speeches.

15. They were amazed, they answered no more: they left off speaking.

16. When I had waited, (for they spake not, but stood still, and answered no more;

17. I said, I will answer my part, I also will show mine opinion.

18. For I am full of matter, the spirit within me constraineth me.

"It is the work of an artist," he says, "that is before us, and as he said, that which he has still things to be said. He proceeds to set forth his conception of the orthodox doctrine of sin and the meaning of human suffering.

In the course of his speech an entirely new character is introduced—the punishing angel, or destroying angel. "This angel," says Professor Jastrow, "who appears only again an independent conception, is inserted into the text because some editor thought it appropriate to the general theme."

It will be seen that Professor Jastrow has undertaken a big task. He indicates this himself when he says in his "Preface":

"No modern translator of Job makes the attempt to distinguish between the original book and the amplifications of Job, as every literary critic of the ancient Orient, without such distinction by hypothesis to obtain the key to the great masterpiece, was indeed to recognize it as a masterpiece. The starting point in my study of the book was the realization of the impossibility of the separation of Job from the poetic dialogues in which the two people are linked by the story, the reason for the suffering in the world and the frequent complaints of the perverted punishment of the righteous. The story of Job is like a sermon, or like a parable of a preacher enlarged.

He does not claim to have solved all the difficulties in the book, but if what he does claim is true it is hard to see what remains to add that his hypothesis is not divided and subdivided to make his theory of Job acceptable to any reader. No part of the book is inconsistent with the rest, no part is technical, and it is hard to see how any reader that it is intended

"I," said Dupin, "was the original Deducer."

It has a leisurely movement that is distinctly pleasing to the reader, without really retarding the novel's action, and one never loses the sense—that in so many detective stories one never gains—that this is really a story about human beings. At the same time, the American reader may be permitted to express a certain weary irritation with the character who is presented as being 'a New York man,' who in the course of one short speech gives vent to 'I guess,' 'Say,' 'I reckon,' and 'I've knocked around pretty considerable.'

"One other point I feel constrained to mention—a criticism, not of the book, but of the 'blurb' on the jacket. It is true that 'here is a tale which all of Mr. Fletcher's enthusiastic followers—and all others—will enjoy to the end.' The story is not praised too highly by the writer of the 'blurb.' But when, in ten lines that are supposed to be at least descriptive, said writer misspells the heroine's name, misstates the incident with which the mystery opens, and refers coxily to 'the little university town' when the action takes place in London, one may raise a protest, surely, in the interests of bald accuracy."

"Well, that's that," said Holmes. "Very good, indeed, Watson. You ought to be a book reviewer. What else have you there?"

Dr. Watson placed four books on the table, removing them from his black bag.

"Here," he said, "is 'The Riddle of the Mysterious Light,' by Mary E. and Thomas W. Hanshew. It is not a novel, but a collection of short tales strung together. Our old friend, Cleek of the Forty Faces, once known as the Vanishing Cracksman, is the hero. Right at the start we have vicious Parisian Apaches. Then there are mysterious murders with an element of the supernatural apparently entering into the plot, and stolen jewels.

"The 'Rose of Fire' is a ruby stolen from a Burmese temple. Apparently the natives are after it. Cleek is ever resourceful, but, I think, the authors have taken the easiest way to make him a success. They have endowed him with a quality that immediately gives him an advantage over any crook that he begins to hound. In short, he possesses the faculty of muscular contortion of the face and is able at will to change decidedly the cast of his features. Such a gift naturally makes it quite easy for him to outwit criminals.

"But does not this show laziness?" broke in Holmes. "I never had any such advantages. I just used my brain. Even Kennedy here has the advantage of scientific knowledge and apparatus. But for Dupin and myself our creators cut out a terrific task. It was merely by powers of human reasoning that we solved the riddles propounded us. What else have you there, Watson?"

"'On Secret Service,'" said Watson. "It is by William Nelson Taft and purports to be a series of Secret Service stories based upon authentic happenings in the United States before and during the war. If these episodes are true, it certainly shows a highly gifted detective instinct in the American Secret Service."

"They are wiser far than we guess," said Holmes. "I, myself, have been in touch with American operatives more than once. They do not make public their triumphs and in that way they conserve their power. Scotland Yard, for instance, has received so much publicity that it has almost become a joke. In Washington the Secret Service lives up to its name. How are the stories in that book?"

"Why, very fine," said Watson. "They are short and straight to the point. No literary characterization is to be found in them and their succinct qualities almost suggest a newspaper man as the author. There are thrills galore, as the reviewer would say, and not a few skillful bits of work on the part of the Secret Service men."

"I think I'll take that home to my grandson," said Dupin, pocketing the book. "He always was interested in tales that possessed a modicum of truth."

"Here," said Dr. Watson, holding up a brightly jacketed book, "is 'The Great Pearl Secret,' by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. I know that this cannot properly be called a detective story, but it has a mystery, and to all intents and purposes it is built along the lines that the good detective story is fashioned upon. You know, my old friend C. N. Williamson died but a short time ago, and it is a sad fact that no more shall we see the names of these two authors upon the jacket of one book. They were a prolific pair assuredly, and quite the best part of it was the high literary average at which they kept their work. The Williamsons sought always, first of all, to spin an entertaining yarn and keep the reader on pins and needles to the end of the last chapter, and their success is undisputed. Then, too, they used some genuine literary art in their character delineation. It was never very high but it was always adequate and quite a step beyond the horde of pot-boilers.

"'The Great Pearl Secret' tells of the disappearance of the 'Tzarina's Pearls,' the arrival of an empty box with a paste replica of the jewels to Pat, the American girl who is to marry the Duke of Clarenanagh. Later we have the mysterious disappearance of Pat herself. Certainly if there is no detective in this book it deserves to be ranked among that class of fiction."

"Yes," said Holmes, "the Williamsons were real nice people. I think I ran across them in Bath when I was working on the Case of the Crawling Emerald."

"I never heard of that case," said Watson, pricking up his ears.

"No," said Holmes, "I thought you were making quite enough money out of the cases you have written about so well without my divulging that rather unique chain of incidents. Is my needle filled?"

Watson assured him that it was and proceeded to discuss the last book that had reposed in the black bag.

"This story is not a bad one at all," he said, "although it appears to be the work of a rather newcomer. It is called 'That Affair at "The Cedars,"' and is written by Lee Thayer."

"What has he done before?" asked Kennedy.

"Lee Thayer is a woman," explained Watson, "and she has written 'The Mystery of the Thirteenth Floor' and 'The Unlatched Door.' When I say she is a newcomer I am only speaking in a relative manner. She undoubtedly knows how to build up a good mystery and in this book she has done it. It is the sort of fiction that may be read within a very few hours. The characterization is not apt to halt the reader very long, for the tale is obviously built for suspense only. Suspicion is cast upon the wrong persons, of course, and there is a real surprise at the end."

"Just what is the theme?" asked Holmes. "I'm a good deducer, but I cannot deduce that from your remarks."

"Imagine a beautiful woman marrying a strong brute of a man under the impression that her lover is dead," said Watson. "Then imagine the lover unexpectedly returning and the husband being found dead in his study shortly thereafter. Was it suicide, accident or murder? Upon this theme Mrs. Thayer weaves her threads and she tangles them up in fine fashion before she chooses to unravel them."

"I think I'll keep that book myself, Watson, if you don't mind," said Holmes, filling his pipe for the sixty-seventh time. "I need a little reading, for I am sleeping very badly just now. This forced retirement that I am in is chafing me considerably. Do you know, Watson, I think it is time that you brought me out into the public eye again? I still think that I could make some of these young detectives sit up and take a lot of notice."

"By Jove, Holmes," cried Watson, "I'm sure I'm willing. There's all those cases you have mentioned in the various stories I have written about you. None of them have been set down on paper yet. They would make quite a book."

"Drop in tomorrow at Baker Street and we'll talk it over," said Holmes. "At the same time, though, don't forget that both of us will have to put our best foot forward, for these youngsters are really getting off some absurd detective yarns. That man, Fletcher, now—well, you call around in the morning, Watson."

Queries and Answers

Communications for these columns should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, NEW YORK TIMES. They should be written on one side of the paper only, and must contain the name and address of the writer as an evidence of good faith. Owing to the great demands on the columns, only queries of particular interest will be printed.

QUERIES

Glasgerion

J. A.—In Chapter II. of Kingsley's "Westward Ho!" at the beginning of a paragraph, I find: "And Sir Richard looked at the boy's broad, strong face and swore a great and holy oath, like Glasgerion's, 'By oak and ash and thorn,'" &c. As this is the oath that Kipling has used so effectively in "Puck of Pook's Hill," I was interested in looking up Glasgerion. But I am unable to find him in the books of reference I am able to consult. Can you or your readers tell me who was Glasgerion and what was the occasion of this oath?

"Wigwam in the Wilderness"

FRANK SOLLEY—Will some reader give me the name of the author of a book called the "Wigwam in the Wilderness"? It was a great favorite of mine some thirty-odd years ago.

"We Sow the Seed"

BERNE LEON—I would be glad to have you tell me the name of author and title of the following poem:

We sow the seed and we may reap
The harvest flower;
But God alone can watch and keep,
Lo! when our eyelids droop in sleep,
He sends the shower.

"To Watch Our Seas"

G. E. BARLOW—I am very desirous to discover the name of the poem, and the author who wrote it, containing these or similar words:

Give us men to match our mountains,
Give us men to watch our seas.

"The Gathering Place"

E. K. K.—Can any of your readers tell me where I can find a short poem called "The Gathering Place," beginning, "Life changes all our thoughts of Heaven"?

"The Blind Girl's Lament"

H. M. C.—Can you assist me in finding the words of an old song, "The Blind Girl's Lament"? The first stanza is like this:

They tell me the earth is so lovely and fair,
Bedecked with sweet blossoms which
God hath placed there.
Oh, would I could see them, though fleeting the view!
Methinks I could even retain their bright hue.

"Spring Had Come"

C. L. H.—Can you tell me the author and name of the poem of which the following is a part?

Spring had come and little Bet-ha
With her chamois by her side,
Up the mountain wandered further
Than the narrow pathway guide.
There the royal eagle rushes
From his eyrie overhead;
There the mountain torrent rushes
Madly o'er its stony bed.

An Americanization Story

M. S. R.—About ten years ago there appeared a story (in the Summer months of either the American, Everybody's or McClure's Magazine) of a Polish man who had come to this country with his large family. He was a miner; the son played on the basketball team at school; the daughter at an exhibition was dressed as Liberty and wore the American flag. It was an excellent story on Americanization. Can any of your readers tell me the magazine and name of story?

"In Your Garden"

M. M. M.—Can any one tell me where I can find a poem, one verse of which is:

In your garden you have roses;
Some are white and some are red.
Give them to me while I'm living,
Not on my grave when I am dead.

I would also like to have the answer, which is something on this order:

In my garden I have roses;
Some are red and some are white.
With sincerest greeting I bestow them
On you while you are still in life.

"Oh, Toiling Hands"

A. R. T.—I would like to know the name of the author of a poem running somewhat as follows:

Oh, toiling hands of mortals;
Oh, unwearied feet;
Traveling you know not whither,
Soon, soon it seems to you * * *

"How I Envy Jim"

A. E. M.—Can you or any of your readers supply me with the humorous poem called "How I Envy Jim," or, perhaps, this is the first or last line.

"A White Stone"

LEWIS MILLER—Kipling, in one of his poems or one of his stories, makes allusion to "a white stone in your life." This may or may not be the exact quotation. Can one of your readers tell me through your columns the name of this poem or story?

"Oh, Brave Heart"

L. FENIK—Can some reader tell me the author and words of the poem which closes with the following line:

Oh, brave heart, bear it just another day!

"No Court of Chancery"

Y. K. M.—Can you or any of your readers tell me where I can find these lines:

I know no Court of Chancery,
I go by Nature's acts of Parliament.

"The Wonderful Snow"

JOSEPH KENNEDY—Would you find out for me the author of the enclosed poem:

The wonderful snow is falling
Over river and woodland and wold;
And the trees bear a spectral blossom
In the moonshine blurred and cold.
There's a beautiful garden in heaven
And these are the banished flowers,
Falling and driven and drifted
Into this dark world of ours.

"The Minstrel's Curse"

GEORGE A. PEPPER—Can you or your readers tell me where I can get the poem entitled "The Minstrel's Curse"?

"There Is a Destiny"

MARY DEAN—Will you kindly furnish me with the complete poem from which the following lines are taken, also the name of its author:

There is a destiny which makes us brothers,
None walks his way alone;
Whatever we give into the lives of others
Comes back into our own.

"A House to Rent"

J. M.—About ten years ago I read in a primary reader a poem about a bird house, part of which I am able to recall:

A house to rent, a house to rent,
A tip-top, first-class tenement,
With airy chambers sweet and wide,
And lovely views on every side.

Come, little husband, bring your wife,
And take our pretty house for life.

"Shanahan's Auld Shebeen"

JAMES PAXTON—Kindly advise me where I can get the poem (Irish) "Shanahan's Auld Shebeen."

"With a Little Hair Broom"

J. F. H.—Can you or some of your readers give the words of a poem beginning:

There was a little old woman
With a little hair broom.

ANSWERS.

"Clug"

HENRY E. HUBBARD, Elmira, N. Y.—Answering the query of Juliet C. Smith in your issue of Jan. 2, I enclose Bishop William Croswell Doane's sonnet to his dog, Cluny:

CLUNY.
May 24-25, 1902.

He had lived out his life, but not his love;
Daily up steep and weary stair he came,
His big heart bursting with the strain, to prove
His loneliness without me. Just the same
Old word of greeting beamed in his deep eye,
With a new look of wonder in it, asking why
"The whole creation groans and travails." He
And I there faced the mystery of pain.
Finding me dumb and helpless, down again
He went, unanswered, with the dawn to die.
And find the mystery opened with the key,
"The creature from corruption's bondage free."

Gavit, Albany, N. Y.

"The Calf Path"

HORATIO G. COZZENS, New York—I note the query of J. A. Hammond in your issue of Jan. 2 regarding the poem with lines beginning:

One day through the primeval wood,
A calf walked home as good calves should.

The poem is entitled "The Calf Path," and is anonymously published in "Shoemaker's Best Selections," Vol. 25. It is too long to copy here.

This poem is the work of Samuel Walter Foss, and it may be found in "Whiffs from Wild Meadows," published by Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, Boston, 1906. The piece has also been published in pamphlet form by several publishing companies, among them the International Harvester Company.

Others who answered this query were Myrtle Glenn Roberts, Miss R. Wilson, Carrie Edelsten, J. George Flammer, Beatrice G. Mallett, George W. Cuning, John R. Sheffield, Mrs. G. L. Merchant and A. A. "Little House o' Dreams"

H. C.—Answering "L. V." in your issue of Dec. 26, "Little House o' Dreams" was written by Claire Wallace Flynn, and was printed in Ainslee's Magazine. It has since been set to music several times. I append a copy of the verses:

LITTLE HOUSE O' DREAMS

Oh, little house with windows wide,
A-looking toward the sea;
How have you come, why have you come
To mean so much to me?
Your walls within my heart are raised,
And, oh, how strange it seems!
My hopes but measure to your roof,
Oh, little house o' dreams.

Oh, little place where friends will come
The tangled world to flee,
Brave little nook where peace will bide,
And hospitality!
Pray where's the magic wand I need
To touch your slender beams,
And change you to a home in truth,
Oh, little house o' dreams?

Others who answered this query were Doris H. Cozzens, D. Falkenstein, A. V. Dugan, Mrs. Nora W. B. Campbell and Mrs. J. T. Rockefeller, New York; Adelaide M. Prime, Middletown, N. Y.; Dorothy Webster, Montclair, N. J.; Helen Jones-Laye, Troy, N. Y.; Hilla Thompson and D. H. Marsellus, Bedford Hills, N. Y.

"I Am Only One"

J. WALKER, Red Bank, N. J.—Answering the query of "A. E. H." in your issue of Dec. 26, the poem asked for is by Edward Everett Hale. It runs as follows:

I am only one,
But still I am one.
I cannot do everything,
But still I can do something;
And because I cannot do everything,
I will not refuse to do the something that I can do.

An answer to this query was received also from S. E. Peck, Port Jefferson, L. I.

A Rhymed Alphabet

A. H. ELWOOD, Richfield Springs, N. Y.—The rhymed alphabet which K. Britton asks for in your issue of Dec. 26 was printed years ago by Gray, Sprague & Co., Albany.

Mr. Elwood sends in a complete copy of this clever rhyme, as does "J. L. S.," New York, but it is too long to print. The first four stanzas run:

A was an Alderman fond of good cheer,
Who invited his friends to a feast once a year.

B is Bow Church, and the Alderman dwells
Within sight of its walls, within sound of its bells.

C was the company, highly delighted,
Who went to the feast, upon being invited.

D was a Don, a proud Spaniard was he,
Whom some were surprised at the party to see.

A Funeral Hymn

JESSIE A. COLYER, Newark, N. J.—The funeral poem about which "F. E. P." inquires in your issue of Dec. 26 is Hymn No. 242 in the Protestant Episcopal Church Hymnal, the author being J. Ellerton. The first stanza reads:

Now the labourer's task is o'er,
Now the battle day is past;
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last.
Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping.

JUST PUBLISHED

COW-COUNTRY

By

B. M. BOWER

¶ Lovers of tales of the real West will find keen enjoyment in this story of Bud Birnie's adventures at Little Lost Ranch in his attempt to stand on his own feet and make his way in the world. They will learn of the mystery surrounding Burroback Valley, of the night ride through the fearsome Catrock Canyon, of the fight at the bank in Crater, and the search for Marian Morris, and they will shudder occasionally and laugh often, for this is a typical Bower novel, and that is saying something.

¶ Full of the lure of the Sunset Land of Romance, the Bower books are different, because you find in them not only the splendid sweep of the plains and mountain ranges, the glory of the sunset, the rugged strength and resourcefulness of the men who ride and shoot, but also a gay and rollicking humor as typical of the West as all the other characteristics which lovers of Western novels like to find. That is why "Cow-Country," like the other Bower books, will be so popular.

Stars in the Pool

A PROSE POEM FOR LOVERS

By EDNA KINGSLEY WALLACE

The Chicago Tribune calls it

"A story of love that aspired, that suffered, and waited, that was half slain and was reborn; the story is of fairy creatures, and the whole thing is like shadows in a pool, beautiful and still, the perfect semblance of things that are."

The Boston Transcript calls it

"A purple patch out of the age of chivalry—an exquisite tale that has the shimmering grace and spiritual charm of the romantic spirit of chivalry."

The New York Tribune says:

"Beautiful in conception . . . the delicate imagery will haunt the reader as a delightful memory."

Reversing Darwin's Theory of Evolution

SYMBIOBIB, A Socio - Physiological Study of Evolution. By H. Reinheimer. London: Headley Brothers. 10s.

THE doctrine of the survival of the fittest in nature has been so often misread as the survival of the strongest that when Germany attempted to apply it in the political field humanity was plunged into the most cataclysmic and almost suicidal World War. In philosophy and science as well, however, it has tended to make of nature an order—or disorder—blind and ruthless, where, alike in simplest germ cell and in most highly developed organisms, the one law of hostile and savage rivalry alone has seemed to emerge out of the deadly welter of life; a law—or a cosmic curse—that appals and seems to doom the tender and yearning spirit of misplaced humankind. Some, in desperate reaction, have tried to flee for escape to the comforting illusions of art; more, to return to the reassuring faith of religion; Sir Oliver Lodge and many like him have sought to escape from the dour despair of today in a spiritualist tomorrow.

The more reassuring, however, is it to find science itself, through the same rigidly honest and painstaking and unemotional study that keeps its eyes and feet upon the solid earth lest heaven dazzle and mislead it, blazing through naked and unvarnished physical facts and phenomena a strange new road to that "sweet reasonableness" and ethical justice in nature, which softer and more sentimental faith has heretofore (failing to find it in nature) sought in God.

One of the latest scientific studies of this sort is strikingly set forth in the present volume, which, though it has been already credited in scientific reviews in England and France as making distinct and important contributions which must henceforth be reckoned with in any future consideration of evolution, deserves a wider and more popular introduction than could be given to it in the purely scientific press. This is an effort to present some of the striking high points of interest to lay readers.

To Mr. Reinheimer the saving evolutionary process of nature consists not in ruthless destructive competition, but in quiet yet definite co-operative exchange. To him, evolution follows along bio-economic lines, where co-operative exchange (Symbiosis) leads to progressive evolution and survival, while predacious parasitism brings with it decay, degeneration and extinction. This principle he deduces from innumerable concrete biological experiments and studies of organic life and behavior as found in various stages of nature, from the algae and bacteria at the borderline of plant and animal life, living and growing symbiotically by such exchange, to the rapacious lion and the whale, the lordly but decadent and moribund kings of the forest and of the sea. Put into lay terms, it may be said that he finds that those organisms which prey destructively for their own nourishment and continuance on the very "capital" of other plants or animals go through the parasitical processes of degeneration and decay; while those organisms which live off the surplus or "interest yield" of other organisms by exchange of their own like surplus, progress in the evolutionary scale. To live off the surplus fruit of the tree or plant, vindicates itself as "naturally right" or "ethical" in its result both upon the feeding organism and upon the plant species; to read or uproot the tree or plant, as the elephant and some other predatory animals do for their feeding, leads in turn to organic decay of the offender. It is symbiotic and "right" to feed on the surplus milk of the cow or the eggs of the fowl; but nature avenges upon the predacious parasite in her own inescapable physiological retribution the preying upon the cow's flesh (capital) or the slaying of the goose that lays the golden eggs.

The effect of symbiotic moderation in cross-feeding is strikingly shown in many widely varied and interesting experiments demonstrating in remarkable ways the physiological consequences of various degrees of predacity. There is one by Yung, for example, where tadpoles (in the normal state, cross-feeders) were fed alternatively upon beef, fish and frog's flesh (a gradual intensification of in-feeding), with significant results as regards the ratio of male and female in reproduction. The return of sex proper with its normal proportions of numbers (making for healthy propagation of the species), he finds, coincides in every case with the return of the species from a career of non-symbiotic indulgence to one of symbiotic moderation and rectitude.

The greatest problem of modern science concerns the micro-organisms, both in the human body and in the agricultural soil: What are the conditions under which they are friendly and highly useful, or, in the alternative, antagonistic and highly injurious? Our leguminous plants, as is well known, have on their roots "nodules" consisting of colonies of useful nitrogen-fixing bacteria. These hard-working bacteria live in partnership (symbiosis) with others and with the leguminosae, to whom they surrender some of their nitrogen in return for starchy products. The author points out that not only are nearly all useful plants dependent upon some symbiotic helpers, but fungi, as well as bacteria, play an important rôle in such symbiosis, although the fungi, unreliable scamps, frequently abuse their position. Orchids have become so dependent upon fungi that they cannot exist without the latter (in the roots or bulbs).

What is true of the micro-organisms of the soil applies also to those (such as the phagocytes) in our own bodies. The more there is of mutual service the better it is for health. Hence it is of the utmost importance to understand the conditions and laws—the payability—of symbiosis. Our very organs stand in a kind of symbiotic relation to one another. They are in reality semi-independent organisms, involved in a common organic sociality not only among themselves but also with organisms outside. If the organs fail to work harmoniously, i. e., in due partnership, disease ensues. The biological "law of the members" applying here applies in an extended sense also to the relations of all organisms to each other, especially in the relation between plant and animal. If these relations are not adequately marked by co-operation, disease must inevitably ensue.

If is one of Mr. Reinheimer's theses that monstrosity, senescence and extinction of species are due to acromegaly, or giant's disease, which in turn is due to a lack of co-operative behavior. It is the weakness of Darwinian biology, he holds, that it can account no more for extinction than for "mutual relations." How, he asks, can "natural selection" be a reliable formula, seeing that if is based upon this half-understood "struggle for existence"? Mr. Reinheimer's theory accounts for extinction in that he holds that the root of the evil is predacity. Some species, for example, have become veritable plant-assassins, as witness the wild boar, the elephant and the gorilla, who bring down whole trees, attacking them with their tusks or jaws in order to get access to the fruit or sap or pith. Hence, in the course of the ages, these beasts have overdeveloped their teeth and jaws (and other correlative parts) at the expense of brain and of higher evolution.

The full sequence of cause and effect cannot here be set forth, but the book shows how "felonious" behavior of the animal invariably reacts injuriously upon its organization. The case of the plant assassin affords negative evidence of what it is that constitutes the norm of "mutual relations," namely, due partnership between species and species and due membership between organ and organ.

The book opens a new vista not only for biology, but also for ethics, for it sets forth that there is no irreconcilable conflict between man's and nature's ethics, as we have hitherto been led to believe. The work is rich in interesting citations from many fields of science and philosophy, from writers and thinkers of many lands and languages and of widely varied provinces, drawing even from the poets where the truths expressed by them seem to the author to have a sanction in the facts of science. At the expense of a little hard reading, it will prove well worth it to all who would like to fortify their hopes for the progress of the world by going not merely to the proverbial ant but to the very bacteria for the study of nature's wisdom.

New Stone Age in Which We Are Living

THE NEW STONE AGE. By Harrison E. Howe. Illustrated with diagrams and photographs. Third volume in the Century Books of Useful Science Series. New York. The Century Company. $2.50.

TWO of the longest chapters in the world's history take their headings from the material which, during their courses, best served mankind's progress—the Stone Age and the Iron Age. When some future H. G. Wells comes to write another outline of history he will refer to the period in which we live as the Second Stone Age. He may call it, more exactly, the Age of Concrete. But concrete is, after all, nothing more nor less than artificial stone—stone which remains plastic until its three concomitants—cement, water and stone—are brought together and the builder wills them to harden into a single mass of the exact size and shape suited to his purpose.

In "The New Stone Age," Harrison E. Howe, Chairman of the division of research extension of the National Research Council, tells the romantic story of cement and concrete—tells it with scientific accuracy and fullness, but without the verbal encumbrances which make so much scholarly writing seem detached from all connection with everyday life.

The book opens the reader's eyes to many wonders to which he has been blind simply because of their closeness to his vision. It drives home a realization of how important a part concrete has played in modern material advancement, and starts him speculating on how important a part it is yet destined to play.

In this new stone age we are surrounded on all sides by construction achievements as great as the Pyramids that owe their existence to concrete. Without concrete, it is doubtful if the Panama Canal, one of the seven wonders of the century, could ever have been completed. It was to concrete that the Hindenburg line chiefly owed its longevity. One of the most spectacular uses to which cement was put in the war was during the attack upon Ostend and Zeebrugge, where old war vessels, filled with cement, were towed into place and sunk. When this cement became permeated with water and set, it formed an obstruction to incoming ships very difficult to remove. Concrete ships were another outgrowth of military necessity, although small barges made of this material had been successfully used before the war. The development of the canal systems that were the first forward step in the transportation facilities of this country depended more upon concrete than upon any other single factor. Experiments now being carried on by the Long Island and by the Northern Pacific Railroads hint that concrete roadbeds may prove an important a factor in the development of our railroads as they did in the building up of our canal systems.

Never does our admiration for the ancients bulk larger than in the presence of their enduring monuments. The traveler from America stands in awe before the Pyramids, speculating on the engineering problems overcome in their erection and contemplating the impressive evidence of the vast expenditure of human labor that brought them into being. The Roman roads, such as the Appian Way, and the Roman aqueducts inspire almost equal admiration for their durability.

These enduring marvels would have been impossibilities had not their engineers been masters in the handling of stone. Mortar, made from burned lime, was used in building the massive Egyptian monuments. The Romans, too, made something very like our present cement by mixing volcanic ashes and lime.

It is a strange truth that the secret of making cementious material from these ingredients was unaccountably lost for half a score of centuries. Doubly strange in view of the long ages that man had known it. (The Appian Way was laid twenty-three centuries ago, and the Pyramids are, at the lowest estimate of their age, considerably more than twice as old.)

Between the time when the Romans so strangely lost the secret of making cement and the time when man refound it no appreciable advance toward what we today call Portland cement was made until the end of the eighteenth century. From that time on the development of artificial stone has been almost continuous.

This development is traced step by step in "The New Stone Age." After reviewing the history of the product's early progress both in Eaurope and in this country, Mr. Howe gives a detailed description of the raw materials and methods of manufacture employed in its contemporary production. He devotes a chapter to the by-products of the industry, and carefully explains just what chemical action takes place when cement "sets." He describes the various types of cement, and then passes on to an explanation of concrete. Concrete is nothing more than cement mixed with an aggregate and water. An aggregate is almost any mass of mineral matter — usually gravel of varying sizes. The technical problems that arise in the application of concrete and cement to various problems are taken up at some length, and elucidated in language not difficult for the lay reader to understand.

If the reader is impatient to get to the romance of cement he will probably skip hurriedly over these preliminary chapters. In so doing he will miss many paragraphs of human interest such, for example, as the one in which the author tells how the use of reinforcement in concrete arose from the work of a French gardener, who introduced metal parts in the making of flower pots. This gardener was a rediscoverer rather than a discoverer: the Romans were in the habit of using bronze rods, crossed and otherwise placed, to take the tress due to tension. An equally interesting paragraph appears in the chapter on by-products of the cement industry:

> In Southern California there is a factory in the heart of the fertile orange belt. It became the centre of serious agitation that threatened the factory with extinction. There had been many demands made by complaining neighbors; and * * * it became increasingly apparent that either the dust (from the plant) must be prevented from escaping or the plant definitely shut down. * * * Since 1915 this recovery plant (which collected the objectionable dust) has proved of unusual value, for the price of potash rose to unprecedented heights, making the recovery plant more profitable under war conditions than the cement plant itself. * * * The plant operated on a satisfactory economic basis from the proceeds of the recovered potash. * * * In this instance a series of fortunate circumstances has shown a possible way to produce potash; that if necessary mills can be operated with cement as the by-product and potash the thing most desired, should such production ever be so important.

As suggested above, the impatient reader may want to skim these preliminary chapters. In fact, he may as well do so unless he wishes to pursue further the study of cement and concrete; but when he reaches those chapters devoted to an exposition of the part being played by concrete in the development of such a primary factor in the country's commercial health as transportation he will not want to slur over many sentences. The story is impressive enough to remove all temptation to skip.

Wherever strength and hardness are requisite, wherever water-fire-and-vermin-proof material is desirable, concrete is easily king. This artificial stone will survive under conditions where even natural stone fails. Cleopatra's Needle stood for some four thousand years in the dry climate of Egypt, but when it was set up in Central Park in 1885 and subjected to new atmospheric conditions and the corroding action of sulphurous and sulphuric acid fumes, which are present in the air of all modern industrial cities, the stone of the ancient monument began to disintegrate so rapidly that it had to be protected with a coating of paraffin. Old buildings in London have already begun to show the effect of this same acid moisture since the burning of soft coal became general along the banks of the Thames. In Rome the masonry of the Roman Empire still stands largely because of the continued use by the inhabitants of the Eternal City of wood as fuel. The surfaces of this masonry could be damp-proofed and water-proofed to a remarkably satisfactory degree with a scientifically prepared cement coating.

The most striking examples of the service of concrete to modern progress is furnished in its universal effectiveness and cheapness in the building of highways, waterways, bridges and tanks. In railroading it has become virtually indispensable. The number of uses to which it is being put on the farm grows daily greater, and its military and miscellaneous uses are as manifold as they are obvious. Chief among its general virtues is its low cost. Whenever construction work of any kind is being carried on far from a base of raw material supply, concrete is ideal, because it can nearly always be made from material at hand. Almost all land will yield a satisfactory aggregate, to which it is only necessary to add water and a little cement to produce a satisfactory concrete.

Space limits render it impossible to enumerate here the multitudinous advantages of concrete or even to mention the tremendous number of uses to which it can be put, or to suggest the numberless products now being made from it that have been formerly made from iron or wood. As a single illustration, we will cite its merits as a material in the construction of highways.

False Splendor of Past Inaugurals

"Tilted ginger ale bottles give the hint to others, and the cracking of hard-boiled eggs begins."

By A VETERAN POLITICAL OBSERVER

THE Congressional mutiny against the project to make President Harding's inauguration "the most dazzling celebration within the memory of the present generation" has had the bad luck to be the victim of President Harding's veto. At first he was reported to have vetoed everything in the inauguration ceremonies that generally make it an occasion of bad taste and costliness, but he has permitted a modest parade, and consented to make his speech on the east front of the Capitol. Most of the expense of the thing has been eliminated, and the citizens of Washington have bowed in a commendable spirit to the inevitable.

The mutiny began with a protest chiefly against the turning over of the Pension Office to the inaugural ball. Senator Borah rather savagely intimated, too, that his idea of an appropriation was the amount covering a street car ride to the Capitol and back. Such potent voices as Senator Nelson's were raised against too much splendor, and in the House Uncle Joe Cannon's voice was heard against such features as the misuse of the Pension Bureau for the so-called inaugural ball, which in past years was a private business enterprise, and had nothing to do with the inauguration, except that it took place on the same day.

The showy ball was merely a means of enabling the business men of Washington to get back the money they had put up, and of making it possible for visiting citizens to board at home that they had taken some part in the inaugural ceremonies, which, as a matter of fact, they hadn't. But the ball was only a part of the inaugural doings, subject to frequent criticism, including the custom of having the President make an inaudible address to a noisy crowd on the east front of the Capitol.

The inaugural ball, however, was specifically objected to by the statesmen who followed Senators Nelson and Borah and Representative Cannon in this instance, and the objection was the expense. It was pointed out in a Congressional debate the other day that in addition to the ordinary expenses of changing an office building into a ballroom the pay of the clerks went on even if it was a month before they could return to their work. But this was not the worst that could be said against the inaugural ball. It was not only an expense, but a useless expense.

The ball had nothing to do with the official ceremonies, which end at the Capitol in the afternoon. The business men of Washington formed a league and raised money for the expenses of it, although they saddled the people of the United States with all they could make Congress appropriate money for. Anybody who had the price of a ticket could get in. In order to give an official stamp to the proceedings it was customary for the President and his wife to show their faces for a moment and then go home as fast as possible.

When President Wilson was elected in 1912, he reviewed these features of the quadrennial humbug, and announced that there would be no ball. Neither would he join the Chevy Chase Club, which seemed to be growing into an institutional rite for Presidents. My recollection is that he subsequently changed his mind about the club, but he never warmed to the inaugural ball, and there wasn't any.

But the ball was not half as objectionable, in the opinion of many observers, as the chosen way in which the American people exhibit their dignity and that of their President when he actually assumes the office, and this really is official. The inauguration of the Vice President is the only dignified thing about it. That takes place in a most seemly manner in the Senate Chamber. But thousands of people have come from great distances to see the President take the oath, and they must be satisfied. This is what happens:

On the east front of the Capitol there has been built a great wooden platform for the occasion. In front of it stretch the thousands, clear into the Congressional Library grounds. The Library is quite a way from the Capitol. It may, roughly, be said that the President, if he stood in the Times Building on Broadway, would be facing a crowd the last of which would be visible, or, rather, invisible, at the corner of Broadway and Fiftieth Street. This crowd has been standing there since 7 A. M., the President coming out of the Capitol from the Vice President's inauguration at about 1:30. Of course, it has brought its lunch with it; sandwiches, hard-boiled eggs and sarsaparilla in bottles, to be drunk without glasses.

"Boys perched in the trees of a library grounds throw down peanut shells."

The stand or platform is so elevated that people below it could not hear the President if they tried. Those further out in the crowd see a few little manikins step into a tiny box like a summerhouse. No matter how tall the President and the Chief Justice may be, they look about a foot high to more than half that vast crowd. One manikin reads something to the other, and when the reading is finished the crowd knows that the oath has been administered. Those who cannot see at all learn it from the front ranks. Then the other manikin, who is the President, steps forward in the little box and opens his mouth. Some of the crowd can see that he is speaking. Others cannot even see that his mouth is open.

Our forefathers picked on the one day in the year when it is practically sure to rain or snow in Washington. The President often faces thousands of wet umbrellas and sees few or no faces. The people around him do not hear him. The newspaper men have seats nearer than the other invited guests on the platform, but they catch only a detached word or sentence here or there. Down at their feet, below the platform, they see men with their hands at their ears, straining to catch a word and then giving it up. Perhaps the Vice President and some of the foreign Ambassadors hear the speech, but nobody else does. Having attended every inauguration since and including that of McKinley, I feel sure of my ground in saying that not a dozen men have ever heard a Presidential inaugural address, with one exception, to be noted later.

As the tired crowd cannot hear, and cannot see if it should be raining, it becomes restless. In the rear of it the crowd begins to talk, at first subduedly and then at the top of its voice. Meanwhile boys perched in the trees of the Library grounds throw down peanut shells and apple peelings into the crowd. Tilted ginger ale bottles give the hint to others, and the cracking of hard-boiled eggs begins. The talk spreads from the rear ranks forward, rank after rank yielding to the temptation toward sociability in the cold and wet, until it becomes a roar, and by the time the inaudible President has made his bow and gone off the whole multitude is talking. By his bow and the rising of the guests on the platform the chattering crowd below knows that the inauguration is over, and begins to run for the trolley cars.

The custom of the inauguration is said to have begun with Jefferson, though in his day there could not have been such multitudes and the scenes could not have been so noisy. In a blizzard Andrew Jackson took the oath, and made his speech inside the Senate Chamber. The chroniclers of that day do not record the difference, from which one is strengthened in the belief that the crowds could not have been so great or the scenes at the inauguration so confusing.

In 1909, when Taft was inaugurated, there was another blizzard that swept the streets clear, automobiles, cabs, hacks, and in which to life to venture front. This danger real. The Novels of Henry Adams steamer whose mind will not give him rest until he has been in the engine-room and talked with the engineer. She wanted to see with her own eyes the action of primary forces; to touch with her own hand the massive machinery of society; to measure with her own mind the capacity of the motive power. She was bent upon getting to the heart of the great American mystery of democracy and government.

The heart of the mystery was simple political dishonesty. "mere moral paralysis." The man upon whom she had looked as typical, and almost married, Senator Silas P. Ratcliffe from Peoria, Ill., the most powerful person at the capital, turned out to have been a faker of bribes, a "moral lunatic" who "talked about virtue and vice as a man who is color-blind talks about red and green." In the end she rejected him, presumably for a mild Virginia gentleman of the old school, John Carrington, and sailed for Europe with her sister, Sybil Ross, in trembling and nausea, her nerves shaken to pieces by "the dance of democracy."

Such an indictment of Washington seemed excessive to all, perhaps, save the author, whose expectations of American politics had been almost mystically high before his residence there following the Civil War. His disgust with office-seekers had moved him in 1869 to write an article for the North American Review on "Civil Service Reform," outlining the circumstances which were "degrading and corrupting society itself" under the unwilling but helpless Grant, and proposing specific reforms. Now, with no change visible in the spirit or organization of the Civil Service, he did not restrain himself, but used the bitterest language at his command.

Wealth, office, power are at auction. Who bids highest? who hates with most venom? who intrigues with most skill? who has done the dirtiest, the meanest, the darkest, and the most political work? He shall have his reward.

Where did the public good enter at all into this maze of personal intrigue, this wilderness of stunted natures where no straight road was to be found, but only the tortuous and aimless tracks of beasts and things that crawl?

Cynical old Baron Jacobi of Bulgaria burst forth once before Senator Ratcliffe with this:

"I have lived seventy-five years, and all that time in the midst of corruption. I am corrupt myself, only I do have the courage to proclaim it, and you others have it not. Rome, Paris, Vienna, Petersburg, London, all are corrupt; only Washington is pure! Well, I declare to you that in all my experience I have found no society which has had elements of corruption like the United States. The children in the streets are corrupt, and know how to cheat me. The cities are all corrupt, and also the towns and the counties and the States' Legislatures and the judges. Everywhere men betray trusts both public and private, steal money, run away with public funds. * * * I do much regret that I have not yet one hundred years to live. If I could then come back to this city, I should find myself very content—much more than now. I am always quite content where there is much corruption, and was parole d'honneur the United States will then be more corrupt than Rome under Caligula; more corrupt than the Church under Leo X.; more corrupt than France under the Regent!"

"Democracy," though it can hardly be called a good story, has a number of good points as a novel. Its conversation is often superb, as that of its author is said generally to have been. The chaff and banter of mischievous Victoria Dare, the wicked thrusts of Baron Jacobi, and the competitive asperities of senatorial tea-time talk would seem to be the work of a practiced hand—an American Thomas Love Peacock or W. H. Mallock. The pictures of Washington society, "inscrutably vulgar" and without a moral instinct, are so vivid as to be positively disturbing. The new President from Indiana and his newer wife are pathetic in the extreme, while the first encounter between Senator Ratcliffe and the President is described in a scene that is altogether adequate. The persons on the whole are little more than types, but they are types ably and mercilessly conceived.

The book made something of a hit, in London as well as in America, and speculation was indulged in as to its authorship. The New York Nation was of the opinion that it was "the work of some clever Englishwoman long resident in Washington and a practiced writer, carefully revised and edited by an American." Mrs. Humphry Ward, writing in the Fortnightly Review in 1882, made the best guess of all, and indeed the only right one. Analyzing the temper and style as owing their quality to Howells and Henry James, and praising the conversation without reserve, she reasoned that the author must be an American male, and asked whether he might not be one Henry Brooks Adams, who had written an article on "Civil Service Reform" for the North American Review thirteen years before.

Opinions varied as to the justice of the satire. The editor of Harper's called the book "clever but exaggerated," and the reviewer already mentioned in the Nation spoke of its "perversion," its "one-sidedness," its "bias and misinterpretation." This reviewer considered it "both loose and libelous to endue him [Ratcliffe] with the least admirable traits of several well-known public men who are easily recognizable," and charged that the lovel was "as sensational in some regards as if it had a blackmailing intention." The caricature of the President's wife, being "readily identifiable," was a "grave offence against good taste." Mrs. Humphry Ward replied that "Democracy" as a satire was jud, and lamentably so; while the Saturday Review in London, as Tory and anti-American then as always, smacked its lips over it as a document proving beyond all doubt that "The biggest country in the world is not only big but coarse, and in its politics coarse with a brazen venality."

"Esther," as Adams seems to have wished and his publisher seems to have expected, was neither reviewed nor read, and exists today only in stray copies indexed by old circulating libraries under the name "Compton, Frances Snow." Two years ago, when the "Education" was dawning upon the wider reading world, the publisher of "Esther" made a belated announcement concerning it, but the announcement attracted little attention generally.

"Esther" had religion for its theme, not politics. It is interesting to note that it came four years earlier than Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Robert Elsmere" and Margaret Deland's "John Ward, Preacher" to the treatment in fiction of the conflict between skepticism and belief. Adams's handling, it is hardly necessary to say, was in advance of the others, not only in time but in sophistication. The main story is concerned with Esther Dudley's struggle to accept the religion of her fiancé, Hazard, an Episcopal clergyman, not for religion's sake but for the lover's, and her final failure and withdrawal from her engagement. She is a pure, instinctive, ingenuous pagan whom the Church, in spite of everything, bores, puzzles, frightens, and smothers. Her struggle is real but of no avail, and her sacrifice at the end is genuine, for when she has thrown Hazard over she can have her attractive atheistical cousin, George Strong, and she refuses him too.

The tone of the whole is dry, severe, and mordantly rational. The action begins in Hazard's new church. "There was in this new temple today," we are told on the first page, "a perceptible interest in religion; one might almost have said that religion seemed to be a matter of concern." And throughout the book Adams is as cold toward the Anglican altar as a resurrected satyr would be:

"Do you believe in nothing?" Esther asks Strong.

"There is evidence amounting to strong probability of the existence of two things."

"What are they, if you please?"

"Should you know better if I said they were mind and matter?"

"You believe in nothing else?"

"No—N—No."

"Isn't it horrible, your doctrine?"

"What of that, if it's true? I never said it was pleasant."

"Esther" is a thoroughly competent piece of writing, if not absorbing as a story or warm with human nature. The antithesis between Hazard's mind and Esther's is much more convincing than the passion which the two are said to have for each other, as everywhere Adams's intellect is more credible than his intuition. There are many brilliant speeches on dogma, marriage, and what not, and there are a number of curious, luxuriously private personalities—Esther's laconic invalid father, George Strong, the professor, Wharton, the irregular painter with a past and Aunt Sarah Murray, who delivers herself of frequent epigrams on women in a vein which the later Adams, deep in his worship of feminine fecundity and the cult of the Virgin, must have remembered as a little harsh:

All the contented women are fools, and all the discontented ones want to be men. Women are a blunder in the creation, and must take the consequences.

Girls must have an education, and the only way they can get a good one is from clever men. As for failing in love, they will always do that whether the men are clever or not. They must take the risk.

A quick girl soon picks up ideas when she hears clever men talking about matters which they understand

"The Real Henry Adams"

LETTERS TO A NIECE. By Henry Adams. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $2.50.

In addition to the letters which furnish the title to this book Mrs. Mabel La Farge, Henry Adams's niece, who was on terms of intimate friendship with him, tells in her delightfully written memories of a side of that fascinating personality that is barely hinted at in his writings—his singularly fortunate marriage and his happy relations with the circle of his nieces and their friends. The book concludes with a poem (found in a little wallet after his death) and a prayer to the "Virgin of Chartres," including a separate curious and characteristic "Prayer to the Dynamo," which illuminate vividly a little understood phase of Mr. Adams's mind.

Answering the often posed question, "What was the real Henry Adams?" Mrs. La Farge says:

He was sensitive to the point of pain and shy of revealing himself to strangers. A lady who knew him slightly complained after calling on him that Mr. Adams hardly said a word to her during her call, but turned his back and devoted himself to a small child who happened to be there. This was most characteristic. He did not mean to be rude but he probably felt a panic of reserve and no opening, no common language with the stranger, and so he hid his shyness in the child.

At that time he was writing his "History"; hours of concentration were passed in his den, and sheets on sheets of beautifully written pages lay beside him. One could not forget that handwriting. Each letter seemed to be carved rather than written, and the effect of the whole page was that of an interlacing Byzantine design, but perfectly clear to read. The nieces remember him as he sat at his desk, in cool white Summer clothes—his fine head and thoughtful forehead dominated a small frame, his movements and deliberate—only the scratch of his pen would break the silence of the room, until the delicious moment came when he would stop and turn to them with an irresistably droll remark.

Following the death of his wife, Mr. Adams started for the South Sea Islands with John La Farge as a companion. He started out with a paint box and amused himself by trying to catch the lights and colors under the instruction of his companion, who "would see sixteen different shades of red in the sky" that looked to him "just pure cobalt." They journeyed from island to island—Hawaii, Samoa, Tahiti, Fiji, Australia, Ceylon—and finally back by the Red Sea to Europe and civilization.

His Paris, London and Washington letters are at times whimsical, but always intimate, affectionate and of intense interest:

On Saturday we came on to Mont Saint Michel, among a mob of tourists. About Mont Saint Michel I can say little because it is too big. It is the church militant. But if Coutances expressed the last or first word of religion as an emotion of self-abasement, Mont Saint Michel lifted one up to a sort of Sir Galahad in its mixture of sword and cross. We passed two days there in the most admirable herd of human dogs I ever saw at the trough of a table d'hôte, but the castle was worth many hogs.

When you come back to France, if I'm not with you, hire a chateau somewhere, grow grapes for a living, get acquainted with the gentry and do the neighborhood quietly as you did the Deeside. You will find it very cheap and very amusing. With five or six thousand dollars a year you could be swells, and if you would join the Catholic Church you would be absolutely ancienne noblesse and could set up as saints and at least peeresses of France. * * * I admit that the Boston standard is better and quite the highest that ever has existed outside Paradise, but the medieval contrats were more amusing and I do dearly love a female saint. She is so quaint! * * *

venture, a brave adventure, often hard, but with a golden light falling somehow, upon the hardest days. And it was Robert who became the minister. He is a boy in college, "working his way," when the story stops. And he has gone back to the three-cornered village in the Highlands, for a short visit, and returned to America.

There was something very special about the spire of Trinity Church in those days when seen from a ship's deck. You saw it from the Narrows, as you entered New York Harbor. It was very high—the old gentleman says so. It thrust up into the bright air above the soil of America in a particular way. Robert, still sad from that little wee village of three corners and something strange and haunted there, saw this spire from the ship, and in his heart he felt a thrilling recognition and an appropriation—it was as if he took possession then of his country and of his man's estate. Hail! he said. And oh, he said, farewell. Farewell!

"The Story of a Fortunate Youth" is a beautiful little book, full of charm as it is full of tenderness, the work of an author who writes always with sureness, as she writes always with rare sympathy. But it is more than that: It is a remarkably interesting record, an inspiring bit of biography, and a chronicle of Americanization—if the word has not through triteness wholly lost its value—that is unusual, stimulating, and unswervingly fine.

THE MAN OF GOLD

THE MAN OF GOLD. By Rufino Blanco Fombona. Authorized translation of the noted Venezuelan novel, "El Hombre de Oro," by Isaac Goldberg. New York: Brentano's.

In his introduction to this novel Mr. Goldberg speaks of Blanco Fombona, who was born in Caracas in 1874, as one of the outstanding figures of contemporary Spanish-America, where as a novelist he takes his place "among an earnest few." That he has had a busy life, with enough drama to qualify him as a realistic novelist, is not to be questioned, since it includes a period of consular service in Philadelphia, ardent political struggles, prison sentences, travels in the wilds of South America, as well as amid the culture of Spain, France, Holland and Russia, "many a love idyll," at least one homicide in self-defense, duels, important publishing ventures, and so on. With this equipment he should be able to present a striking, colorful narrative, especially when it is placed in the romantic and languorous environment of his native city. This he certainly has done. There is a charm about the story, cruelly and sometimes vulgarly realistic as it is, which is as positive as it is indescribable, while every one of the characters stands out vividly and essential to the completeness of the picture of which they are a part.

A hideous miser and money lender, Don Camilio Irurtia, whose physical unpleasantness is not softened in one loathsome detail, lives with an old housekeeper, Tomassa, rheumatic and pitiful, and the manner in which these two grub along in a filthy home, half starved and repulsive, renders it logical from a fictional point of view that there should be some attractive women brought into contact with them.

The contrast between Irurtia and the three well-born Aguilonga spinsters and their beautiful spoiled niece Olga affords dramatic interest which the author exploits skillfully. The miser makes their acquaintance through the desire of the aunts to sell their beautiful ancestral home to Irurtia, who is to pay for it with another smaller house and a sum of money to make up the difference in the value. Notwithstanding that the miser is so offensive physically and otherwise, two of the spinsters plan to make a match between their younger sister, Rosaura, and the old man. This is the main thread of the plot. How it comes out the book tells. It is not the plot, however, that counts most. The main interest is in the treatment, with all the touches of a master hand guided by one who loves his work and who is a poet, with a poet's unerring point of view.

The translation has been carefully done, and in several instances there are footnotes to explain how Spanish idioms have been rendered into English, while any Spanish text that may be used is always accompanied by its Anglo-Saxon equivalent. Whether Mr. Goldberg's plea that for "such a book and such a writer as this there should exist a public in the United States" is sound, time must tell. Certainly Mr. Goldberg has done his own part well.

DEVELOPMENT

DEVELOPMENT. By W. Bryher. The Macmillan Company.

In accordance with a custom which seems to be steadily increasing in popularity, Miss Amy Lowell has written a preface to this new volume, a history of the "Development" during childhood of one destined to become a writer. And since it would appear that the especial form of authorship which Nancy, the heroine of the book, is to adopt will be that of free verse, who more fit than Miss Lowell to tell us what we ought to think about W. Bryher's book? And it is her opinion that: "No better study of the growth of an artist's mind has been written."

The study is autobiographical in form; it is well, and at times extremely well, written, while those who care for character analysis more than for plot will find it absorbingly interesting. Nancy is not a lovable heroine; she is in some ways one of the least lovable among the many heroines whom we have encountered during the year of 1920. She does not seem to care one single particle for any living soul. She is all brain, and her history is exclusively a history of mental development; her emotions thrill in response to poetry or to the beauty of nature, never to humanity. She had a family of some sort, since there were people who took her abroad and later sent her to school, but these individuals, whoever they may have been, are never referred to save as "they." However, if Nancy is not a lovable heroine she is an interesting one, a shy, clever, bookish child, utterly solitary, fascinated by history, endowed with a strong and vivid imagination, sensitive to natural beauty, sensitive, above all, to the charm and color of words. Her hatred of school, and her experiences in the cut-and-dried institution wherein the well meaning and we suspect much tried "they" placed her, hoping, no doubt, that this difficult, lonely child might be made more normal by companionship, will prove especially appealing to those who were themselves unusually well-read children whose minds had developed more rapidly than their bodies, and who were in consequence either shunned by their schoolfellows as abnormalities, or else venerated by them as prodigies and marvels of intellectual achievement. It is the lesser of these two evils which befalls Nancy; she is avoided, not taught to regard herself as a paragon.

We understand that this is a first book. If so, it is a distinctly unusual one. And whether a first book or the work of a skilled writer, it is much above the average—especially if it be fiction, and not autobiography. There are in it many descriptive passages one would like to quote for their beauty and their richness of poetic imagery, did not space forbid. Nancy travels in England and in Egypt, in Greece and in Spain, and her impressions, as here recorded, are those of a fresh, eager mind, to which the romance of history is a real and a living thing. Her first attempts at writing and her meeting with the gushing lady who flutters over the pages of her book and declares that she will be "a great poet" have an irony which, though it is bitter rather than humorous, is yet justified by the experiences through which the majority of writers pass at one time or another. When we leave her she is only eighteen, restless, dissatisfied, hating the restrictions with which she is surrounded, yearning—as indeed she has always yearned—to be a boy and go in search of adventures. Whether she went in search of adventures or not we do not know, but we feel sure that either she found them or they found her.

THE NEXT CORNER. By Kate Jordan. With frontispiece. Little, Brown & Co. $2.

WHEN Robert Maury, American and mining engineer, left his charming wife Elsie alone in Paris while he went off to examine some mines in Burmah, he proved himself more trustful and indulgent than clear-sighted. For dainty Elsie had always had "the consciousness of some one as a wall back of her, a brace, a shelter," while the "wrong sort of training had turned her into a runaway from results." Then, too, she was very young, much younger than her 26 years, and very, very pretty, with "silver-gold hair * * * deep brown lashes, a silken fringe around unshadowed eyes, and lips of coral pink"; moreover, she had never been really in love with her husband. Before long she had slipped into a gay, decidedly fast set, and there she presently met Don Arturo, eighteenth Marqués de Burgos, hidalgo and grandee of Spain, a man of wonderful charm and still more wonderful beauty, whom most women found irresistible. He developed a passion for Elsie, and during many months was her devoted cavalier, while she, in whose nature there was a capacity for "fierce, imaginative passion that * * * her husband had never touched," was completely fascinated by him. Nevertheless, she refused to accept him as her lover, and it was rather by force of circumstances than through any actual volition of her own that she precently journeyed to Spain, there to be, as she supposed, one of a house-party assembled at El Miradero, Don Arturo's wonderful old country house on a mountain top, many miles away from the nearest habitation. When she arrived she found herself alone there with Don Arturo and a couple of servants. Then at last, her resistance overcome by his ardent entreaties, she agreed to remain with him, to give up her husband and all her old life.

But Fate intervened, and in the faint daylight of the following morning, the "wan hour that weakens even the strong and happy," humiliation after humiliation was heaped upon Elsie, until she felt herself "something that did not fit in anywhere, something not wanted." The end, however, was not yet. The consequences of that eventful night must be met, and it is of what happened to Elsie afterward that the greater part of the romance tells.

Opening in Paris, the scene of the story shifts presently to Spain, then returns to Paris, though to a Paris very different from that of the first few chapters, the Paris not of the butterflies but of the workers. Next comes New York in the deadly heat of August—"There was humidity without sun, except as it came like the suggestion of a burning lens through the mist"—and a shabby hotel room, where the sun "came through a broken yellow blind and fairly broiled upon dust, rents and decrepitude." From New York, the current of events carries Elsie to South America, and the luxurious hacienda called El Iris, not far from the small, North Andean city of Valencia, where one morning at dawn the book closes. These changes of environment give an opportunity for many varied and clearly drawn word pictures, an opportunity of which Kate Jordan has made admirable use. Her descriptions are vivid and colorful, whether they show us Paris in the springtime, with "the dear smells—the tang of warmed asphalt with cool odors from the Seine, the scent of the chestnut blossoms along the Champs Elysées and from the hyacinths and narcissi in the many vendors' carts" or the far-away hacienda, where on one momentous evening, "A golden haze from lamps encircled the chairs. * * * The darkness and solitude of the night were suggested with lush softness through the veil as was the spark-blue glory of big stars and the glinting of a silver moon that seemed a lantern hung in a distant cedar." The long novel, which holds the reader's attention throughout, contains many very passionate love scenes, and is one of carefully built situations, two of which are especially dramatic and important.

THE HEADLAND

THE HEADLAND. By C. A. Dawson-Scott. New York: Alfred A. Knopf $2.50.

THIS is a story of degeneracy, of an old family in decay. It is, in part, a horrible story, and its most horrible passages are powerfully written. But it is not all horrible; it is built, indeed, around the by no means novel theme of contrast between such family degeneracy and the newer vigor of life, and the heroine is herself as fresh and vital a young person as any novel reader could wish to read about.

The scene is the Cornish coast and along the wild Cornish Sea, the ancient estate where the Pendragons have lived for more than a thousand years. The action takes place in three days. The head of the Pendragon family is an old man, stricken with palsy, yet still shedding fear and misery about him by the savage brutality of his ungovernable rages, which seem to be, indeed, the natural enough fruit of the ungoverned selfishness of his whole life. His older son, who is dead, has been likewise a man of uncontrolled passions, who has left behind him only one child, a daughter, who is a kleptomaniac. The old man's daughter is married, but childless. His other son, unmarried, nervous, physically a weakling, appears to be normal enough, is ordinarily kind and thoughtful; but he is in reality the slave of a horrible vice—the vice of sheer cruelty, the love of torturing weak things. The tragedy of the book is his tragedy, which finds its solution only in the heroism of his death. And the novel's plot has to do with the contrast between these sickly scions of an ancient nobility and the sanity and vigor of Roma Lennox and the farmer, Tavis Hawke.

There is, however, another curious contrast in "The Headland"—the contrast between the extreme modernity of its style and the outworn ideas against which its author inveighs. Roma Lennox, novelist, poet, artist, finds herself both tired and hard up as a result of war conditions, and supports herself for six months, therefore, as companion-secretary to old Mrs. Pendragon; a bomb is burst in the family by Hendre Pendragon's announcement that he intends to marry her. Indeed, Roma herself, who does not love Hendre, but promises to marry him because she is sorry for him, is not immune from recognition of the "grandeur" it would bring to her life to be "Mrs. Pendragon of Caer"—though her paintings have been exhibited in London, her verses and stories are published everywhere, and her one novel apparently ranks with the work of May Sinclair. On the first page a Pendragon connection reflects that "people like Miss Lennox could not be expected to have quite such delicate, senstive feelings as one's self, and perhaps it was as well. They had, poor things, to earn their living." Later she sums up Miss Lennox as "quite a good girl, but not their class. Quiet, and, up to a point, refined; that in her favor, but, oh, dear, to think of her at Caer! What would people say?" And she puts it to Hendre, "Do you think people will—er—be nice to her?" This is because Miss Lennox has been, as old Mr. Pendragon objects when he refuses to allow his son to marry her, "a sort of upper servant" in that aristocratic household. But when it comes to her artistic achievements, we have this:

"Do you know, Hendre, she paints?"

"Not her face!"

"She sells her things." Painting was all right in itself, and you were taught drawing at school, but that did not make you a professional artist. "And she writes—I saw verses of hers in a magazine."

To be an amateur was permissible, but you should not take writing and painting seriously. Pictures . . . yes, water colors that could be framed and hung in a bedroom. . . . Plays that could be acted at a house party, and which would mean dressing up and vigs. . . . But not books, nor notoriety! . . .

(We may mention here that all these dots are a part of the author's modern style.) The fact of being really a writer and an artist is so unfortunate that the bridegroom-to-be must excuse it somehow. So he says:

"I know. She gets all the fun out of it that she can. It is her way of amusing herself."

But the upshot of it all is that the Pendragons all feel sure that their friends will never "accept" Hendre's wife!

Of course the author of "The Headland" is attacking these antiquated ideas tooth and nail. But to take them so seriously as to attack them in this way is to pay them too great homage, surely, in these days. And we cannot escape from the suspicion that in marrying the young novelist to a farmer whose sister-in-law—indeed, whose brother—speaks with a broad country accent and is merely a simple and likable peasant, the writer feels that she has placed her much nearer to her social "class." We may add that old Mr. Pendragon has refused to allow his son to become a surgeon. And the worst of all this, artistically, is that these people, in "The Headland," neither speak nor behave like aristocrats.

The style of the novel is modern to an extreme. We have that extensive use of the second person pronoun with which Miss Sinclair made us so very familiar in "Mary Olivier." And we have whole regiments of little dots. (Is it Mr. Wells whom we have to thank for those dots in the first place?) We have, too, certain "naturalistic" emphases, as this:

Oscar was a . . . beautiful, brilliant? No . . . he was more . . . something ultimate, fundamental, a mouth that kissed.

As a story, "The Headland" is fairly interesting. And it is a really beautiful piece of publishing, well bound and well printed, on good paper.

A FORTUNATE YOUTH

THE STORY OF A FORTUNATE YOUTH. Chapters from the Biography of an Elderly Gentleman. By Jean Kenyon Mackenzie. Boston: The Atlantic Monthly Press. $1.25.

IN "Black Sheep," a record of missionary days in Africa, Jean Kenyon Mackenzie showed to us some years ago her very remarkable gift as a writer—a gift of understanding, of individual expression, of poetry. As poet in verse as well as in prose we have come to know her since, and as author of further African memories published, as her other work has been, in The Atlantic Monthly—who that has read it can ever forget "Exile and Postman," for example? In presenting "The Story of a Fortunate Youth" in book form it seems enough, in introduction of its literary style and its exquisiteness of sympathy, to say that it in Miss Mackenzie's latest work. But in its subject matter it is very different from her other prose writings.

"The Story of a Fortunate Youth" is the tale of a Scotch lad who came, at the age of 19, to America, and of the hardships and the beauties and the efforts of his early days here. The life of the Rev. Robert Mackenzie has been full of honors, of friendship, of incident—matters that make a story that many might tell. Of his boyhood in Scotland, of how he left his home there, of the adventures that befell him during his first years in America, the story cannot really be told by any one except his daughter. He has told it to her often, and so, as "Chapters From the Biography of an Elderly Gentleman," with an understanding and a beauty that make the little record a thing of universal human value, she tells it to us.

The little book begins in the East Highlands of Scotland, in a poor little household in a three-cornered village, where a wee lad, not yet 8, used to write letters for the neighbors with the sharpened handle of a pewter spoon. Here is its beginning:

The old gentleman claims that many years ago his name was Rubie. And that this was not at all a romantic name, but just a nickname. And that he, who dresses like any other decent body nowadays, did the same in the eighteen fifties. He wore a kilt, a wee bit shirt, a velveteen jacket and a Glengarry bonnet. His gallusses were latched to his kilts with a wooden pin. There were pockets to his jacket, and into one of these he put a bawbee when he had one. And the first bawbee ever he had he found in the dust of a long Summer day.

You never would guess, unless the old gentleman told you, how the Highlands of Scotland are continually bathed in Summer. They are like those happy countries you may see from the peep end of an Easter egg. And more than anywhere the long Summer day hangs upon the coast of the North Sea and about the neighborhood of the Moray Firth. Yes, that is the sort of a day they have, and in the last light of any one of them you may see little boys drifting home from golden adventures to their beds in the villages of Ross and Cromarty.

So, with all its reminiscent charm, the tale goes on, of Rubie writing letters for the neighbors, of his becoming a shepherd lad, of his tutoring other children, of his working, after a while, in a smithy, a tiny figure against a background of great horses and a flaming forge. Later he became ticket-seller in the little railway station. And then came a day when, in order to earn money for the education of the little brother who was to become a minister, one of the lads must go away to America; and the family decided it wa Rubie who must go.

Thus, at 19, he set off. Rubie became Robert then. And at first, in America, he worked, as he had worked at home in the Highlands, on many an odd job. But somehow people were always kind to him—even when they swindled him, as they sometimes did; and even when they teased him about his foreign speech they were never rough or brusque. And somehow life was always an adventure, a brave adventure, often its footsteps to explain how Spar[illegible]

World Courts or Conferences?

A Review of Experiments in International Arbitration

By ALBERT BUSHNELL HART

OVER there in Paris President Nicholas Murray Butler sends to the Journal des Debats a letter setting forth that "there are only two known forms of co-operation- political and judicial. The judicial form of international co-operation, which takes form in international conferences specially charged to fix, revise, or impose rules of international right. * * * [There are] other forms, essentially political, which can easily become a supergovernment any free and independent nation could justly hate and fear."

This oracular utterance is in line with interviews and statements by Senator Knox, Mr. Root and other opponents of the League of Nations; and indicates that great effort is making to commit the United States to a World Court with compulsory jurisdiction, as the only practicable method of securing world peace. There seems a disposition to take for granted that a World Court is an easy thing to establish, involves slight obligations, and will have tremendous effects.

Fortunately, there is still time for consideration of this form of international union and international coercion. Perhaps an examination of the other possibilities of securing peace may bring out unsuspected difficulties in setting up a World Court, and serious doubts as to whether it will function in a great international crisis such as we have just passed through. Surely a form of union which cannot keep peace against the peace-hating would be a delusion and a snare.

This is a good time for infallible peace plans, because peace is on a rising market nowadays. Everybody wants peace. Hiram Johnson wants peace. Josephus Daniels wants peace. William the Last wants peace. For several centuries statesmen and publicists have urged plans of peace. The World Court idea can be traced back as far as some passages of Grotius, who in his "De Jure Belli et Pacis" expressed hopes for peace through world law.

Just now the search for peace is particularly keen because the world has discovered that there is no such thing as automatic peace. China is the world example of what happens to a nation that expects peace because it lets other people alone. We know at last that peace by goodwill and common sense, out of regard for one's own interests, in behalf of civilization, for the protection of weak nations, is hopeless. We have learned the bitter lesson that in conflicts of nations, races and civilizations it is not the just but the wicked who decide when peace ends and war begins.

Mankind has been struggling for ages to protect itself from the miseries of war with what we call "international law." In 1914 there existed an elaborate complex of agreements and understandings as to the rights of commerce, the status of aliens, and the amenities of war. A few weeks of campaigning broke down this automatic international protection of the freedom of the seas, of the alien enemy, of noncombatants and neutrals. International law is like every other law. It protects only in so far as there is ultimate authority and force to apply it to those who deny its legality and snap their fingers at its execution.

Nor has the long sustained effort to bring the nations into some form of arbitration been successful. Arbitration in individual instances, between pairs of nations, has sometimes prevented war; but the twenty arbitration treaties which were in force for the United States in 1914, including one with Austria-Hungary, did not delay the entry of the United States into war one day. The network of treaties which were to pass from nation to nation until the whole world was pledged to arbitrate its grievances in advance of war, broke with the first strong pressure. The general arbitration conventions of The Hague of 1899 and 1907 were not invoked by a single power in the six great wars in the following fifteen years—the Boer, the Russo-Japanese, the Italo-Turkish, the first and second Balkan, and the World War: except that Serbia, in the last extremity proposed to submit one of the Austrian demands to The Hague tribunal.

So with the official and unofficial world congresses of the last half century, resulting in many international treaties, which took into account the internationalization of commerce, traffic, posts and telegraphs and the universality of credit and finance. The bankers and shipowners were going to forbid nations to enter into wars. When the crisis came, German bankers and manufacturers and shipowners were just as international as the English and the American, that is, they were nationalized heart and soul.

The publicists who had gone hand in hand in The Hague conferences and the scientific and commercial organizations now gave their talents to the task of defending their nation's war spirit. The only possible way to maintain world peace is by a positive, firmly knit international organization, which can bring about world concentration of purpose and of force, when the crisis arrives.

It is true that there are only two practicable forms of international co-operation, and that as matters stand the world must choose between the World Court idea and the World Association idea, or else go unsaved. Of the two basal ideas, the court is much the junior; for the simple reason that until the establishment of the United States of America judges had never been anywhere recognized as heads of the State. Their recognized function was to settle disputes between individuals, and also between the King (as the representative of the Almighty) and persons accused of crime.

The conception that judges are also lawgivers and that their principal function is to review, and if necessary set aside, the actions of Legislatures and executives is highly modern. There is not a single case of record in Colonial or State courts declaring a statute void before 1780. Even the Supreme Court of the United States never disallowed an act of Congress (except in two cases on trifling issues relating to the jurisdiction of the court) until the Dred Scott Decision of 1857. Abraham Lincoln and his supporters held that decision to be a scandalous interference with justice; and it was not until about 1865 that the Supreme Court began a regular system of reviewing and annulling acts of Congress.

No other country in the world except Canada and Australia has ever adopted this American conception of the superior power and sanctity of the judiciary. When we speak of "separation of powers" we mean that the courts are superior to the other two departments. When the French speak of "Separation des Pouvoirs" they mean that the courts are not supérior. The Swiss Constitution forbids the national courts to abrogate statutes. Whatever the merits of the American system, we have no right to assume that it is a worldwide system or that it could be applied either by or upon countries which know nothing of the doctrine of judicial supremacy.

The recent session of the League of Nations at Geneva proposed a World Court of Arbitration, with compulsory jurisdiction; and that is the kind of "co-operation" which most of the advocates of a World Court desire. The experience of The Hague court proves that an arbitration court without obligation is a toy. Most nations that are willing to submit to a Hague tribune could settle their troubles by ordinary diplomacy. The purpose of a world agreement for a World Court is to bind all nations beforehand to submit disputes that cannot be adjusted by the usual methods.

Just what is the proposal for a World Court? The method has been urged for the last ten years, particularly by the American Society for Judicial Settlement of International Disputes. It was put forward by Mr. Root in May, 1910, as an essential addition to the league of peace. A definite plan was drawn up by Mr. Root and other publicists at The Hague last June and the resulting draft is the basis of the plan just sent out to the world by the Geneva session of the World League.

This plan is brought forward as court, to sit at The Hague and to be made up of fifteen "independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality," for terms of nine years. The jurisdiction of the court is limited to "cases of a legal nature" which involve controversies on the following subjects:

1. Interpretation of treaties.
2. Questions of international law.
3. Breaches of international obligation.
4. Reparations.
5. Interpretation of sentences of the court.

The basis of law, which the court is to "apply in the order following," is made up of:

1. International conventions establishing rules.
2. International custom as evidence of a general practice.
3. General principles of law recognized by civilized nations.
4. Judicial decisions and teachings of publicists "as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law."

States which ratify this plan will be bound to appear if sued by other States or be defaulted. "The judgment is final and without appeal."

This plan is brought forward as an addition to the covenant of the League of Nations, and it leaves standing The Hague Court of Arbitration which has been tried and found wanting when most needed. It is a well-matured scheme, carefully guarded, the details stated methodically and clearly. The Geneva meeting of the League submitted, though as a separate proposition, the principle of compulsory arbitration, and this appeared to have the favor of a majority of the members of the League. The small nations want it, the large nations hold back. The scheme also makes the important distinction between "cases of a legal nature" (which are often called "justiciable cases") and other controversies to which this plan does not apply.

The proposed World Court does not affect the United States directly, because it is intended to be adjunct to a League which the United States declines to join. All the indications go to show that the United States will not ratify the existing covenant, not even with "amendments" or "reservations." It is useless longer to guess what might have been done at Paris toward drawing up a successful League by more than one member of the American commission. It is idle now to ask whether an understanding might have been reached between the two co-ordinate treaty-making powers, the President and the Senate.

The League train has gone past the Washington station without stopping, and it is not likely to back up again to take on new passengers. The controversy has been too long and too bitter, the expressions of the President-elect have been too clearly against building on the foundations laid in Europe. Therefore the friends of peace and of world union ought henceforth to direct their energies toward some new plan, which can be sent out with the powerful backing of the United States.

Would the rest of the world accept such a quick change from the League that they are now developing? There is great reason to think that any reasonable document springing from Washington and not too compelling would be joyfully received in Europe. The Geneva meeting revealed the fact that all is not harmony in the League. The forty-one kittens were nicely placed in their commodious basket (formerly the Hotel National) but some kittens spit at other kittens, and several tomcats sat on the gateposts and feilnely objected to being shut out. The meeting finally dissolved without a clear understanding whether the five biggest cats were to accept the dictum of the thirty-six middle-sized, small and tiny pussies.

Nothing can be clearer than that a League of Nations in which the United States has no part will, in course of time, seem hostile to the United States, and indeed might be hostile. The other great powers, and presumably the small powers, need and desire a league that has the United States in it, provided it

Not the high spice of wit, not the low humor of it, not the savory dressing of rare old English ballad music—not all of them together give to it first claim and clear title to the fickle affection of the playgoer. The crook play is the thing. It is the one variety of theatrical performance in which Virtue is NOT necessarily triumphant — the one brand of standard stage stuff which dares to put upon the boards life as it is, and to tickle the naturally unmoral man with counterfeit presentments of the picturesque and successful rascal he secretly would like to be.

Every small boy plays at being a highwayman—the original profession of the original most successful citizen. And every man grown loves to fancy himself in a character which flatters so completely all his manliest vanities. To have men quail at his eagle glance and women run after him, to swagger and ruffle it and take what he wants where and when he wants it, to squander magnificently the fine things that come so easily to his hand—what could be more agreeable? To take and not to pay: to love and ride away.

Ah, that is the life!

What man, then, with soul so dead that he would not be a stage highwayman and with impunity cut a devilish dash in a world where chains are a make-believe and a musical accompaniment, where iron bars do not really make a cage, and where the hangman's noose is no more terrible than the silken cord that loops up the window curtain?

And who, if he were so lucky as to be a stage highwayman, could wish to be a finer figure of that ilk than Captain Macheath—bold, dashing, gay, debonair, with all the women mad about him, and the gift of song, besides? Who, indeed! Macheath, like his own pistols on Bagshot, is sure fire on any stage. Every man puts himself in his place antomatic-

THE BEST BOOKS IN OUR LITERATURE

No Library, large or small, public or private, is complete without these

FIVE GREAT BOOKS

NO MAN CAN BE CALLED WELL INFORMED WITHOUT A THOROUGH GROUNDING IN THE HISTORY, ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND POLITICAL, OF HIS OWN COUNTRY AND OF OTHER MODERN COUNTRIES, OR WITHOUT A BACKGROUND OF THE HISTORY OF THE RACE IN GENERAL.

THESE FIVE BOOKS, EACH A CLASSIC IN ITS OWN FIELD, COVER THE FIVE BIGGEST TOPICS IN WORLD HISTORY, AND TOGETHER COMPRISE THE INDISPENSABLE FOUNDATION AND BACKGROUND OF INTELLIGENT CITIZENSHIP.

"THE ONE INDISPENSABLE GUIDE TO AMERICAN HISTORY"

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

By JAMES FORD RHODES

New Edition, Reorganized in 8 Vols., Uniform Binding. The Set, Boxed, $25.00.

"There is a kind of greatness in the lucid simplicity with which Mr. Rhodes has handled his vast and complicated material. I was about to say that his history is as absorbing as a play; but I would like to see a play that is half so absorbing." —Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

LORD BRYCE'S NEW WORK

MODERN DEMOCRACIES

By the Right Honorable VISCOUNT BRYCE

This is Lord Bryce's most important work since THE AMERICAN COMMONWEALTH. Part I deals with democratic governments in general. Part II describes some democracies in their working. Part III is devoted to an exposition of the author's conclusions. Published in January. 2 vols. In Sets only.

"THE ONE GREAT AUTHORITY UPON AMERICAN GOVERNMENT AND INSTITUTIONS"

THE AMERICAN COMMONWEALTH

By JAMES, now VISCOUNT, BRYCE

The ONE adequate study of American democracy, read by hundreds of thousands, yet still unknown to many of the rising generation. No American can be called well informed until he has read this classic study of American government and politics. "His work rises at once to an eminent place among studies of great nations and their institutions. . . . There is nothing like it anywhere extant, nothing that approaches it."—New York Times. 2 vols. $8.00

"THE MOST LUCID AND COMPLETE HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE"

A POLITICAL AND SOCIAL HISTORY OF MODERN EUROPE

By CARLTON J. H. HAYES

For understanding of Modern Europe, not only the Europe of 1914 but the Europe of reconstruction, with its new social, economic and political conditions, "there is probably no single work in the English language so useful as this." "The skill, literary as well as technical, with which so great a mass of material has been sifted, condensed and put into permanent form is beyond praise."—Boston Herald. 2 vols. The Set, $7.75

WELLS'S WORLD HISTORY: "VIVID, DRAMATIC, READABLE"

THE OUTLINE OF HISTORY

By H. G. WELLS

This History of the World from the primal nebula to the aftermath of the Great War, with a glimpse into the future, is not only "the most talked about book of the winter," it is "one of the great books of our generation." "An altogether wondrous work . . . his narrative of human struggle and endeavor glows with life. . . . It is astonishing how much of prime importance can be told in two volumes."—James Harvey Robinson in Yale Review. 2 vols. The Set, $10.50

American Engineers in France

THE AMERICAN ENGINEERS IN FRANCE. By William Barclay Parsons, D. S. O., Colonel Eleventh U. S. Engineers. D. Appleton & Co. $4.

A BOOK about the work, achievements and valor of the American engineers who served their country in France in the great war was indispensable for a proper understanding of the winning of the war, and the man best qualified to write it was Colonel William Barclay Parsons, D. S. O., of the Eleventh United States Engineers. He is at the head of his profession. He had a remarkable record for accomplishing great things in that profession before he put on khaki. He is a man of unusual powers of observation. His mind is analytical, and at the same time he has the gift of imagination. Practical, yet in no small degree idealist, he was eminently fitted both to tell the story of modern engineering in the field and to describe his experiences at the front with French and British troops in a sprited and sympathetic manner, so that they are shown to the reader as brave and steadfast allies whose comradeship in the great ordeal should never be forgotten by the American people.

As to the style of "The American Engineers in France," it may be said that Colonel Parsons writes as well as he built railroads and bridges and solved emergency problems "over there." From him one looks for accuracy and proportion, but also one gets sentiment and humor, for he tells a story very well. The book is dedicated "To the memory of all the American engineers who fell in France, and particularly to the memory of the officers and men of the Eleventh Engineers, among whom were the first United States soldiers to be killed in battle in Europe." It was at Cambrai. Of that battle General Pershing said in his final report: "The British attack at Cambrai is of special interest, since it was here that American troops (Eleventh Engineers) first participated in active fighting."

The general reader will be inclined to turn to the two chapters on Cambrai before informing himself about the herculean job of the engineers in France. Colonel Parsons has a good deal to say about the battle for he saw the British go into action. "The Eleventh Engineers," he says, "had been ordered to remain under cover in reserve until such time as it was certain the enemy had fallen back and that no immediate counterattack was imminent. While waiting I went into Havrincourt Wood, which was the centre of the attack." He saw "a whole division of Bengal Lancers, some 12,000 or 15,000 splendid figures with khaki turbans surmounting their black-bearded, swarthy faces," held in leash, as it were, "for the chance of galloping far afield among fleeing infantry." He saw the first prisoners coming down the road to go to the rear, some sullen, some stupid-looking, some "rather interested in their new surroundings," and others relieved to be out of the fighting and safe until the end of the war:

> An infantry column came up at a brisk swing. They have been ordered in. The commanding officer fell out and, running up to two British officers standing by the road, asked, "How's the news?" "Quite good," was the reply. "Thanks!" he said as he turned to rejoin his men. How delightfully British and how thoroughly un-American! Three sentences, six words, on a matter of life and death in a great battle. The answer conveying absolutely no information but leaving every one satisfied!

There is a vivid picture of the tanks, "slowly moving about with a raucous, grinding, grating noise, climbing in and out of shell craters, or flopping over gaping trenches with a motion similar to the rolling and pitching of a bluff-bowed vessel making heavy weather in a tumbling sea." There were 400 of these monsters in the fight. The tank commander displayed from the flag tank a set of signals which read, "England expects every tank to do its damnedest," Colonel Parsons sees everything that goes on about him—the stretcher-bearers picking up the wounded, the ambulances hurrying from the field with their ghastly loads, a bandaged man sitting patiently on a broken stump by the roadside waiting for his turn, making no complaint. One poor fellow had lost part of his face. To him the Colonel extended his flask with the last drink in it:

> He took the cup with great care, drank but a portion, and handing it to a man beside him, who, I noticed, had but a trifling wound in the foot, said: "Here, matey, I will go halves with you."

"War is not all bad!" observes the author. There are few less pretentious and more graphic descriptions of a battle. In their counter-attack some ten days later the British were in turn surprised by the enemy and beaten back for most of the distance they had gained in the tank action. The Germans, without being detected in their manoeuvre, had massed troops, opposite Gouzeaucourt and Boursies, and, after a brief but wicked outpouring of shells, had thrown a host of infantry on "the re-entrant angles of the newly formed salient." At one point the American engineers, unarmed and unready, were caught in the vortex of the attack, the German infantry swarming over the British lines. Some of the American noncombatants made their way under officers to Gouzeaucourt, some took refuge in dugouts, and others who could find no exit or concealment joined British and Canadians separated from their commands. The engineers "seized any weapons at hand, some seized picks and shovels, and defended themselves. One brawny American laid five of the enemy out with a shovel before he dropped. "This irregular body," says the author, "undoubtedly delayed the advance along the main Cambrai-Gouzeaucourt road until the troops in reserve could be posted to make an organized stand."

When several of the engineer regiments were assigned to the British forces there was loud protest at first. "There outcropped," says Colonel Parsons, "that perfectly ridiculous superstition engendered by silly school books that England was still the foe of what had been once her colonies." But in spite of prejudice there soon sprang up between the American and British soldiers "a close, warm friendship, with the highest mutual respect, esteem and admiration." When six months later one engineer regiment was detached from the British Expeditionary Force there was genuine regret on both sides and hopes of a reunion on the field were expressed. An unexpected return to service with the "Tommies" was "hailed with wild enthusiasm, and half of the men in this American command were Irish or men of Irish descent." The British were liked because they were good comrades, helpful, cheerful, never tragic in mood, brave to a fault when properly led, and always to be depended upon to stand and die, if need were, when the battle went against them. The author's account of the relations of American engineers and the British soldiers and of the officers of both nations should be read to cure the distemper of hate engendered by propaganda. Equally informing is what the author has to say about the French, their calmness in battle, their fortitude when things were going badly, their always undaunted courage, and their unvarying kindness. He found the French a noble race.

The great body of this comprehensive, one is tempted to say this complete, book about the nine regiments of engineers raised in the States for service in France deals with organization and the immense and complicated work that they addressed themselves to with such marked success. The engineers in France were a host in themselves, in number 234,000; with armies at the front, 86,000; transportation corps, 60,000; construction, 43,000; forestry, 18,500; training schools, &c., 18,500; supplies, 7,600. "Additions later brought the complement up to 347,000. The author compares the combined armies of Meade and Lee at Gettysburg, 160,000. In detail, but never wearisomely, the work of the engineers is described; the railroads and vehicular roads they built, the ports they developed, the storage yards they laid out, the timber they cut, the water supplies they provided, the camouflage devices contrived, the maps they drew, the searchlight systems they erected, the trenches they constructed, the chemical work they did, and a score of things undreamed of in the old warfare. To the professional man Colonel Parsons's book is invaluable; to the student of war it is indispensable, a "mine of information"; and the general reader will find it always informing and frequently entertaining.

World Courts or Conferences?

men; and that, in any case involving the United States, the majority of the judges are certain to be men speaking a different language and accustomed to a different system from our own. If the proposed codification of international law is to come about through judicial decisions (which is what Mr. Root evidently hopes), Roman law will become a much larger part of the fundamental law of the United States than will be comfortable. For the settlement of the most difficult, and therefore most dangerous, international questions the only possible tribunal, even under this plan, is a World Conference.

That is the only kind of body which will be made up of strong men, active political leaders in their respective nations. They meet, they know each other, they propose, they discuss, they hear objections and suggest compromises, they attack difficulties long before they assume the form of a court case, and deal with them in the light of immediate conditions. They can set up new machinery for settling and preventing troubles; they are not bound by the technical laws of evidence, by recorded judicial decisions, or by their own previous decisions. They recognize the human element; they allow for differences of race, religion and political training.

Furthermore, they take into account the actualities of the present organization of the world into nations of very different size, wealth and population. It is useless to attempt a league in which world-embracing decisions can be made by giving equal votes to the States. The five greatest world powers, the British Empire, French Republic, Russian possessions, China and the United States, contain more than half of the population of the world; and those five powers will never submit long to any system by which they can be outvoted in court or parliament.

The League of Nations offers in the Assembly an opportunity for the smallest nation to have its say and to make clear its state of mind. On the other hand, the present Council assigns to the largest nations the degree of authority which they already have. The United States would be the last of all powers to enter any world union in which its hundred and fifteen million people would be outvoted or have their destiny decided by the twenty other American republics, with their combined population of seventy-five million.

This leads directly to another serious difficulty of any world court; all the parallels with national courts fall away. At present any one of the 115,000,000 individuals in the United States might be a party to a suit, to say nothing of hundreds of thousands of corporations. There are only about fifty-five nations which may become citizens of a world commonwealth, and the contrasts of strength and civilization are startling. Imagine a State in which the Standard Oil Company and Jim Hill were two out of a total citizenship of fifty-five. Where would the fifty-three others stand? The whole question of the ability of a court to hold an equal balance for the litigants is entirely changed when nations of 100,000,000 are called to the bar by nations of 100,000.

A World Court can render the world immense service in straightening out and unifying international law, upon questions where a decided majority of the world wants a change. Just how any World Court is going to restore the United States, for instance, to that position on the freedom of the seas which it so lightly abandoned when it entered the war, is hard to see. The main purpose of world union, however, is not to make international intercourse more convenient or to settle justiciable international disputes on a harmonious system, but to prevent war. Disarmament, combined with a judicial tribunal for the settlement of minor questions, is a high card for the next administration to play—if it is played along with a well-organized world conference.

What we most want, from all men, is not eventual justice, but immediate protection. If the covenant of Nations seemed to some minds to bind the United States to its own hurt, what would be the attitude of the American people toward a judicial body which would be a supergovernment in far greater degree than any which has heretofore been proposed? For the decisions of the World Court would not only be law for the parties to a suit, but also law for the rest of the world. Mr. Root and his friends are saturated with a conception of law as a self-executing force. Do not people obey the police? Have not the States in the Union accepted the decisions of the Supreme Court in suits against each other? The present self-executing law situation in our great cities shows what happens when only a few thousand criminals defy the law and flout the police, and the experience of 1861 makes clear what is the only influence that can keep States in their orbit, if they abjure the Supreme Court.

The only hope for a permanent world union is to invent machinery that will turn out a brand of permanent, fast-white peace goods that will stand bad weather. What the world wants and must have or go back to barbarism, is far beyond peace by judicial decision, with its delays, its technicalities, and its necessarily narrow application. A World Court is useless unless it marches alongside of a World Conference. The kind of world peace that we need is one that will handcuff furious, enraged, violent, high powered, heavily armed TNT nations. We have a standard at hand. Nothing less will answer than an organization strong enough to prevent such a world war as the present one. The time has gone by for any mild or half-way or morally bound system which can keep in order only weak States. The absolute fundamental necessity for a genuine world peace organization is that it shall be able to check, curb, and if necessary, to fight against populous, powerful and unscrupulous nations that are mad to go to war.

Blasco Ibañez, Movie Fan

Four Horsemen" as a novel brought into the limelight many other books by him, some of them written years before the most sensational of all war books made its appearance; possibly "The Four Horsemen" will be the first of a number of screen productions of Blasco Ibáñez novels, though there is little likelihood that any of them will approach in magnitude and cost the picturization of his great war novel now in course of preparation.

"That Spaniard's a regular human dynamo," exclaimed a movie man who, having helped show him around the United States, is now a Blasco Ibáñez "fan" of the first water. "He's just chock full of energy—never stops working—told me he was on the job writing every morning at 8, no matter how late he had been up the night before. I'll never forget the way he made that decision of his to become a writer for the screen. No hesitancy—quick as a shot—just like that! Some Spaniard, believe me! He got so enthusiastic about moving pictures while he was over here that he said once he might eventually make writing direct for them his vocation, with novel writing as an avocation.

"He not only looks like an American business man but he thinks and acts like one. You would never take him for a novelist. You should have seen him outlining his plans while he was in the United States. He can't talk any English, you know, and he had to do everything through an interpreter, but at times he would get so enthusiastic in talking about what was in his mind that he would lean toward the American he was talking to, entirely ignoring the interpreter, and pour out such a torrent of Spanish that his auditor was entirely at sea to guess at his meaning and the interpreter was left miles behind, without any hope at all of catching up.

"It was great fun to watch him and listen to him. When he got the moving-picture craze he was like a child with a new toy."

Arnold Bennett, Maker of Many Plays

A Review by
WILLIAM LYON PHELPS

CUPID AND COMMONSENSE. WHAT THE PUBLIC WANTS. THE HONEYMOON. THE GREAT ADVENTURE. SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE. JUDITH. BODY AND SOUL. By Arnold Bennett. New York: George H. Doran Company. 7 volumes. $1.25 a volume.

ON Wednesday afternoon, May 22, 1912, I went out to Kensington to see a performance of Arnold Bennett's play "What the Public Wants," given in the Coronet Theatre by Miss Horniman's company from Manchester. Just before the curtain rose a box was entered by Arnold Bennett and Miss May Sinclair. These two distinguished visitors drew so much attention that it may fairly be said they divided honors with the actors. Possibly they felt that their presence was not helping the play, for at the end of the first act May Sinclair withdrew into the rear of the box and Arnold Bennett descended into the stalls. It was my good fortune to have him take the chair next to me, which was vacant—there are almost always vacant chairs at good plays. He looked like a man of the world, and not like a saint or an angel; but his face and eyes had the expression of unalloyed bliss which in Italian paintings illuminates the countenances of the inhabitants of heaven.

You see, in 1912 everything was coming his way. After many years of struggle, he was riding the top wave of popularity. His masterpiece—still his masterpiece—"The Old Wives' Tale," was only four years old; it had floated his previous books, and guaranteed his future; at that very moment his play "Milestones" was the chief success in London, the talk of the town; it was adding perceptibly to his daily income. Arnold Bennett was a happy man, and looked the part.

To me it was decidedly interesting to be present at a play of importance, and sitting next to the author. I spoke to him between the acts. He was exceedingly frank and cordial, said he had enjoyed himself thoroughly in America, and expected to return thither. We did not then know that the whole world would shortly have another engagement. He said the Harvard men had given him so much food that he had arrived at Yale without his digestive apparatus, and was quite unable at luncheon to play up to the conversation of President Hadley. I told him how much I admired the piece we were both observing. So far as I can remember his conversation, he replied:

"I wish you could get the public to agree with you."

"Do they regard it as a highbrow affair!"

"That is just the trouble; this is thought to be highbrow, and the regular theatres will have none of it."

As a matter of fact, although "What the Public Wants" did not happen to be what the West End managers thought the public wanted, it certainly interested the audience that afternoon; but it was given by the admirable Manchester company, who interpreted the author's lines with imagination and intelligence.

Excluding "Milestones," which was written in collaboration with Edward Knoblock, we have before us seven plays by Arnold Bennett—one more illustration of the creative period of drama in which we are now living. One more illustration also of a trained literary expert, novelist, essayist, critic of high standing, joining the group of British playwrights, along with the glorious company of Barrie, Shaw, Galsworthy, Ervine, Masefield, Dunsany, Yeats and others. Literature and drama are united in England as they have not been since the seventeenth century.

Like Bernard Shaw, Mr. Bennett served for years as professional dramatic critic. It must have been during these weary nights of enforced attendance on musical comedy that he learned to despise that form of spectacle. Certainly the best description of musical comedy that I have seen anywhere is the detailed account of the stage and of the audience given in Mr. Bennett's novel, "The Roll-Call," Chapter IX. Incidentally, it is the best thing in the book.

Arnold Bennett's first play, "Cupid and Commonsense" (1909), has a plain-speaking preface which will be even more interesting to future historians of the drama than it is now. He diagnoses contemporary symptoms under the heading, "The Crisis in the Theatre." He begins by stating his qualifications for analysis and condemnation; for ten years he was thoroughly trained in business methods, and indeed conducted a business; from 1895 to 1900 he attended nearly every first night in London as professional dramatic critic. He, therefore, felt doubly qualified to discuss the theatre both from the artistic and box-office point of view. Furthermore,

> I have written, or collaborated in, about a dozen plays, five of which I have sold to West End managers and received money for, and two of which were commissioned. None of these plays has ever been performed; my sole representations in a London theatre have owed nothing to the reckless daring of any manager. In 1900 I quitted London, and for nearly eight years (chiefly spent in Paris, where I had full opportunities of studying the French stage) I scarcely set foot in a London theatre. I then passed three months in London, practically as a Chinaman, visiting the theatres, confabulating with managers, agents, actors and actresses, attending rehearsals and generally listening to jeremiads. I approach the London theatrical crisis, therefore, as a member of the public, a man of business, a critic, a novelist, a dramatist, a habitué of managerial sanctums, a familiar of the Parisian stage, and a perfect stranger.

Thus Arnold Bennett has every qualification to write great plays except one—genius. For while these seven plays before us are individually and collectively above the average West End and Broadway bill-of-fare, they are only good plays. They are not great. Just as their superiority to the ordinary theatrical entertainment is clear, so their inferiority to "The Admirable Crichton," "Major Barbara," "The Pigeon," "John Ferguson," "Nan," is equally evident. Arnold Bennett is a literary artist, a writer of distinction; he was angry recently when The London Mercury suggested that he did not intend a certain one of his plays to be taken seriously; all his books are to be taken seriously, he insists; but there is a single-minded burning sincerity in the masterpieces by the other writers named above that is not a part of Mr. Bennett's temperament.

The rest of the preface to "Cupid and Commonsense" is highly significant, and should be read by every one interested in the theatre. The attack on the London commercial manager is probably justified; for it is as absurd to have a business man, who is only a business man, run a theatre as it would be to put him in charge of a conservatory of music or an academy of the fine arts. (There is no gulf greater than that which separates some commercial managers from some theatre directors.) It is like having a professional sporting man run a church. No doubt he would introduce into the ritual some snappy work; but—

The production and distribution of literature in general passes through equally singular channels. Nearly every bookshop employs clerks that are as innocent of knowledge of their specialty as a mole. In a drug store, or in a dry goods emporium, one may reasonably expect the man who waits on customers to have some acquaintance with his business. This is seldom the case where books are sold. The absolute blank stare (every ray of intelligence absent) with which the customer is greeted who asks for any book or any author outside of the reigning best-sellers is matter for tragic mirth.

If these plays by Arnold Bennett cannot be seen on Broadway, I should like to recommend them to the Theatre Guild, to the Neighborhood Playhouse, to Greenwich Village, to the Bramhall Playhouse, to the Provincetown Players, and to the host of other organizations and Little Theatres that are helping to keep the drama alive. They are pieces of strictly contemporary interest, intelligent interpretations of the life of our day and generation; the dialogue is usually better than the plot, but they are by no means without movement. The dull spots are the exceptions. Inasmuch as opportunities to see these dramas may not be frequent, I can testify that in book form they make interesting reading. The only one I ever saw on the stage is "What the Public Wants."

One of the most powerful is "Cupid and Commonsense." The scenes are in the author's favorite Five Towns, and the characters are sharply individualized. Old Boothroyd is remarkable, and in the hands of a capable actor would make a deep impression. He is not the only man in the world who has a large fortune and lives meanly. The philosophy of such a life, which is surely more sinful than a life of dissipation, being wholly selfish, is clear enough. Such persons take more actual pleasure in saving money than others do in spending it. I know of one man who would never pay five cents to ride on a street car because he said it was equivalent to wasting a dollar, a nickel being one year's interest on that principal.

"What the Public Wants" is an ironical play on yellow journalism, and the particular reader or spectator in any country can incarnate in the leading rôle the publisher who happens to be his particular aversion. The millionaire newspaper king in this play is not nearly so sinister a figure as the terrible Lechat in Mirabeau's "Les Affaires sont les Affaires"; but that was almost undiluted tragedy. Here the superjournalist is no monster, hardly a caricature—he is a real man, and by no means unlovable.

"The Honeymoon" has a curious just-before-the-war atmosphere; curious, because it was written so early as 1910. A German airman plans to win the British prize for flying over Snowdon; and the young English competitor, hearing of this at the beginning of his honeymoon, is torn between love and patriotic duty. The dialogue sparkles with wit and humor, and the play is exceedingly diverting. It is interesting to observe that both in this comedy and in "Sacred and Profane Love" we have a character who might easily have given the hint to the brilliant author of "Potterism" for Leila Yorke. I assume that all who read this page have read "Potterism." Well, consider Mrs. Reach Hazlam in "The Honeymoon" or Mrs. Sardis in "Sacred and Profane Love." The similarity to Leila Yorke in professional conduct looks almost too great to be accidental. However, even if Rose Macaulay did take the hint here, and we cannot prove without her testimony that she did, she developed the character to such heights of complex perfection that she made Leila Yorke truly her very own. We are all Potterites; we differ only in degree.

"The Great Adventure" and "Sacred and Profane Love" are taken, respectively, from the author's novels, "Buried Alive," and in the second case the name also is repeated. Naturally the former is a whimsical and charming play; it could hardly help being that. "Sacred and Profane Love" is a failure, and I may add that the novel from which it came is the poorest of its writer's production. n give glimpses of the life, the developments, the constant movement and stir of the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

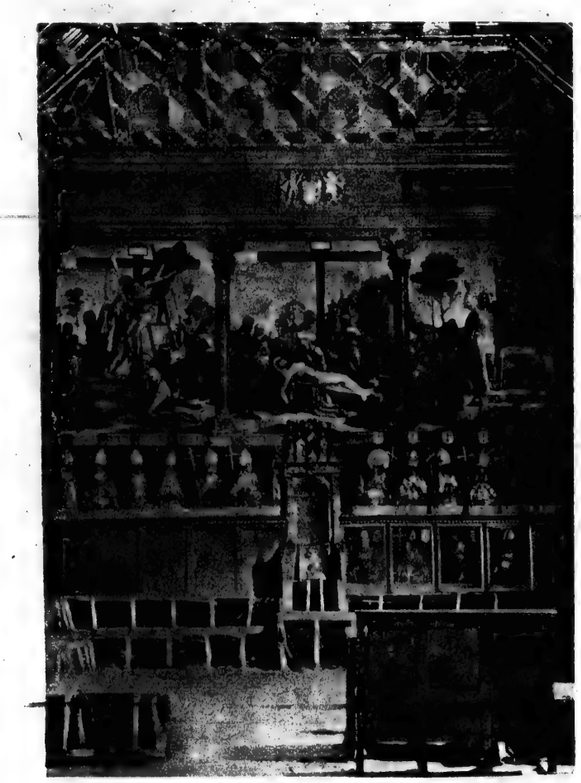
Over and over again, for instance, one gets suggestive evidence of that incessant stir and interchange that were going on through the Middle Ages and the era of the Renaissance all over Europe, and was so deeply influencing all the life of Europe that it left its impress strong even upon the ceilings of church and hall, castle and dwelling in Spain. In a building in Granada, which is now the warehouse of a dry goods merchant—O romance and tragedy of the passing years!—there is a combination of Moorish construction of the fifteenth century with Renaissance decoration of the sixteenth which shows strong Italian influence upon Spanish motives and methods. This building was originally the seat of the Moorish University of Granada, served afterward as the residence of Ferdinand and Isabella, and for three hundred and fifty years, from 1500, was used as the Town Hall. The Moorish Castle at Zaragosa, supposed to have been the prison of the hero of Verdi's opera, "Il Trovatore," whose "splendid ceilings, still intact," the authors say, "date from the time of Ferdinand and Isabella, who designated the building as a royal residence." They describe the ceilings as important because of the combination presented of Moorish and Gothic, and they find in the motives proof of the presence of some Flemish designer, probably Jan Waas, whose name was translated into Spanish as Juan Guas. This Fleming worked in Spain for a long time and evidence of his hand is to be found often, the authors point out, in Dutch and German and florid German Gothic motives or handling. Ferdinand and Isabella favored the Flemings and commissioned Jan Waas to build their proposed mausoleums. He was the architect of the famous Infantado Palace at Guadalajara, built in the latter part of the fifteenth century, which is described by these authors as "a weird combination of decadent Gothic and Germanized Moorish." It was erected for the powerful Mendoza family, who lived there "in greater state than royalty itself," and exerted almost as much power. Its ceilings and its architecture are bizarre, with much wood carving, and with decorations in gold, black and red and silver gray. The palace was abandoned for many years and but recently has been put in order by the Spanish Government and used as an orphan asylum for the children of Spanish officers.



The Chapter Room, Toledo Cathedral.

Cloister of the Monastery of Santo Domingo De Silos.

What the authors describe as "the finest ceiling in Spain," and "the acknowledged masterpiece of interior decoration in Spain," is that of the chapter room of the Toledo Cathedral, dating from the sixteenth century. It has the painted and gilded wooden ceiling which was "the inherent expression of the Spaniards," although it has also mural paintings, the work of John of Burgundy, "a method of decoration primarily Italian and rarely encountered in Spain." The wooden ceiling was built and carved and decorated by Spanish artists and its perfect preservation today, say the authors, "testifies eloquently to the thoroughness of the builders' work." The dominating note of the decoration is gold, the pattern so small in scale that it resembles applied panels of the damascened ware of Toledo, with backgrounds of peacock green and burnished copper. The fresco panels on the walls deal with incidents in the life of Christ and contain also a series of portraits of the Archbishops of Toledo.

Some beautiful photographs are given from a deserted and decaying palace at Penaranda de Duero, whose recent owner was the ex-Empress Eugenie. It was built early in the sixteenth century for the Count of Miranda and remained in that illustrious family through the centuries until Eugenie was the last of the line to inherit it. The palace has been so neglected and abused that the whole structure is crumbling, but nearly a dozen salons still retain their ceilings, in much damaged state, but with enough remains to indicate their original beauty, magnificence and interest.

cessive generations their stirring message at Versailles, are helplessly public in their appeal, which is more to the spirit of curiosity than to the spirit of patriotism as thrones fall and uniforms change. One private letter from a soldier to his family makes a deeper impression upon both mind and heart. One scrawl from the trenches outlasts in its effect all the battlefields of Détaille. But this would be the worst of reasons for omitting public portraiture. Because those are not moved shall there be no more Premier and Food Administrator? The war portraits are documents of a great war, not intimate expressions of feeling, and in spite of heroic efforts in the matter of backgrounds and accessories to get away from the standardized portrait the painters have approached their task in great humility, obviously straining a point to tell the exact truth as they see it concerning these mighty personages of history. It would have been easy to take liberties in favor of aesthetic result. And it must be said that, where the picture has conquered mere likeness in the painter's intention, succeeding generations will be more apt to pause for a closer look.

The portrait of Cardinal Mercier by Cecilia Beaux, for example, subtle, delicate, sincere in the treatment of the physiognomy, gains inexpressibly by the admirable setting and pictorial character of the costume. The fluent brush strokes rest with beautiful lightness on the broad surfaces, and the color is strong and fine. This, however, was an exceptional chance, and the artists in general should be applauded for their heroic efforts, under most difficult conditions of living and working, to get at the character of the sitters who were making history with such rapidity that most of that character had to be read in the work they were doing.

To the public interested in first thoughts in art, usually the best thoughts, the exhibition of preliminary sketches for these portraits at the Arden Galleries will prove rewarding. These sketches will be reviewed next Sunday in connection with the completed portraits.

The exhibition of landscapes by J. Stewart Barney at the Ehrich Galleries is particularly strong on the side of composition. A number of the subjects are Scottish scenes, with mountain and heather, brooks and moors contributing to the slightly grim beauty of the general effect. The artist has been particularly successful in his definition of the planes of mountain ranges and the relation of the foreground to the background. In the Newport pictures the subjects are drawn from the less familiar localities of that well-known region, the title of one, "Off the Beaten Track," giving the key to the artist's intention. "Summer Afternoon" is a pleasant composition with a quiet stream traveling far into the distance, and the principle feature is a tree of superb proportions, the foliage of which is sketched with an appreciation of its character as mass and of the character of the leafage as well. The exhibition lasts through the month.

der surface and brought out as a fine ornament the treble line which, starting from the bottom of the breast, passes along the front of the shoulders and along the uppermost edge of the wings to their extreme pits." This Sphinx was placed high up on a narrow rock. To quote Plutarch: "When the Sphinx was seen against the sun's rays the animal back was of golden hue, but when standing against the clouds it threw back a dark blue reflection just like the rainbow."

The Oracle, in time of war, was not always neutral. In the Peloponnesian War, in 431, Delphi was all for Sparta. There is evidence that at least once the priests of Apollo were bribed, but they threw all the responsibility on the Pythia and their prestige was not very much affected. But, as a rule, Delphi was very tolerant, if not in all cases neutral. Argos, the ally of Athens, set up a gigantic bronze horse close to the Athenian Marathon group, made of a part of the spoils taken from the Spartans valued at twenty-five talents, which was equal to $25,000 of our money. On the other hand, the Syracusans in 413 B. C. immortalized the defeat of Athens by setting up their own treasury at Delphi on the Sacred Way.

The monuments of Delphi, in fact, are trophies of the varying fortunes of the Hellenic States. And, as the excavations proceed—for since the war has ceased civilization may again wander in the path of beauty—new lights on the history of Hellas may shine upon us. To Dr. Poulsen we must pay the tribute of recording his name as that of one of the most eminent torch-bearers in this ever enlarging circle of beneficent knowledge.

The World of Art

Degas, Mary Cassatt and Others

"Le Promenade des Chevaux." By Degas.
In the collection of Jacque Seligmann.

THE paintings and drawings by Degas in the Seligmann collection at the American Art Galleries are, before everything, trenchant. The line cuts down to the essential, not with a crude slicing, as you cut bread for the mere convenience and etiquette of handling, but with the knowing precision of a surgeon to whom a hairsbreadth may be the difference between success and failure and twenty seconds the difference between life and death. The unhurried swiftness of the surgeon is the pace of Degas's art.

If there is hesitation anywhere it is in the oil paintings. The oil medium was not a sympathetic medium with Degas. He used it despitefully, as though he were scornful of the means by which he was gaining his effect. It cannot be said that he ever succumbed to its allurements. No beauty of pigment exists in his paintings. But he accepted what it offered him; accepted with a superiority of manner that would have made him appear contemptible, had he not been intellectually so great. He used the timid offerings of his paint box thriftily, to swell his resources and fix in his mind certain truths observed and impossible to express by line alone, but he never seemed much to enjoy his painting; he never caressed and persuaded his material; he never commanded it with that pride of authority that takes the place of affection in certain minds. Perhaps it hardly is too much to say that the oil medium was a hateful necessity to him, and that he disliked it in proportion as it furthered his purposes and made itself useful.

If he did hate it, he none the less asked much of it. He asked it to express a side of his genius otherwise not to be suspected; the intense conservatism of his taste that withstood his burning curiosity and pioneer spirit. If he drew with a boldness and individuality, a research into secret sources of form and movement, that created a new art language and causes him still to resist popular esteem, he painted with a firm, prim finish, a reticence of color, an economy of matter, such as Ingres practised and Leonardo preached.

To his pastels one turns for the revelation of his true joy in art. Here he could make his expert gesture, gallop through his amazing arabesques, put himself through all his paces as a draftsman and still permit himself an orgy of splendid color. He is too masculine to play with his colored chalks or to make them provide a vaporous envelope for the powerful forms he constructed. They are pressed into the service of the construction, but they enhance and irradiate it. Note the scribble of white across the nude back of one of his bathers—it tells you the detail of the anatomical story, the movement of the sharp blade of the thin shoulder, but it adds all that there is to say of the fair gleaming skin. The orange and red and violet and blue and sonorous purple in his studies of ballet dancers equally belong to the organic construction of the picture, but the pleasure of color rises to a great height, the austerity of the artist yields to a natural hunger for richness of sensation, it is the relief given by the chorus chanting in Greek tragedy.

The sale of this fine collection of drawings and paintings will test the interest of the picture-buying public in this country in art that makes no compromises. What Degas had to do was to discover the sources of appearances and to create forms significant of the human structure and its power of change and movement at the dictation of the living brain. To this he added the task of the decorator, combining and arranging his vital forms in beautiful abstract patterns. Observe the interlace of the legs of his racehorses, or the complicated linear design made by the limbs of his women crouching in the bath or combing their hair or pulling on their slippers. The most commonplace act is dignified by its reduction to essential line and made beautiful by the rhythms of movement and direction. Such dignity and beauty makes an appeal to the few, but seldom reaches the popular heart, with its human reactions against a difficult ideal.

Mary Cassatt is another artist who disdained the easiest way. Her impassioned striving for technical superiority led her to abandon the methods in vogue at the time she began to study and to follow the severe example of Degas, whom she recognized as continuing the classic tradition of French art when to the public at large he was a revolutionist. She followed it as she followed the example of the old masters in the public museums, entirely detached from the personal influence of the painter. She met Degas only after she had gained sufficient knowledge of painting to exhibit in the Salon. The story is told of Degas taken to the Salon of 1874 by Tourny, a painter and copyist, who conducted his friend to the picture of a young woman by Mary Cassatt, and said: "There!" "Yes," Degas responded, "you are right. There is a painter who feels as I do." He let it rest at that for three years, and then visited her studio with Tourny and invited her to become a member of the Impressionist group.

The etchings by Miss Cassatt to be placed on view this week at the Grolier Club reveal even more convincingly than her paintings how deeply she was committed to technical research. They range from the early plates, conscientious, somewhat overneat, explicit in modeling, to the shorthand methods of the later work; rapid and correct notations of facts outside the conventional limitations within which most artists are content to work. A gesture that has been often used commends itself to an idle observer because much of the work of recording it has been done by others, and he has a mental image of the way to do it. With Mary Cassatt as with Degas this familiarity detracts from the pleasure of the work. Their zest for technical adventure leads them to attack unusual poses, perspectives to which much must be sacrificed; types so individualized as almost to be unrecognizable as types. Neither was either artist solicited by the reward of patient retouching. Miss Cassatt used her point as she would a pencil, drawing directly upon the copper, solving her problem with unhesitating strokes, and letting her mistakes stand. This accounts for the remarkable freshness and spontaneity of her plates.

Her preoccupation with children as subjects for her paintings and drawings extends to her etchings, and nothing in the history of prints is more beautiful than her studies of young children, the soft flesh and tender contour of their little bodies described by a line as subtle as any used by the reverential Chinese. Nowhere does she outrage the delicacy of her subject matter by an overemphasis, yet nowhere does she fail to show the character inherent in the frail envelope. Nor does she make this sensitive envelope of childish softness and fragility too soft and fragile to suggest its power to exist through the assaults of its environment. There is something of resilience in the little bodies pressed close to a protecting nurse or mother; there is something of firmness in the undulating lines that enclose so precisely the volume of the undeveloped little heads; there are indications of unmistakable personality in the vague features.

Miss Cassatt has done more than contribute good work to the sum of American art. She has contributed a standard for the public to accept. Her subject matter is of universal appeal and in her choice of subject matter she has gently persuaded where her technical triumphs would have antagonised. Few of us are so accomplished as to feel the deep significance of her technical triumphs, none of us can resist the wholesome and endearing charm of her magnificent versions of childhood. "Yes," said Degas, observing her lucid and incisive statement of the thing seen, "there is some one who feels as I do." "Yes," says the public, watching the natural, earnest little children, eating, bathing, playing, caressing their mothers, "there is some one who feels as we do."

The "war portraits" now on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum are not incompatible with the general tradition of commemorative and public portraiture. "All the Glories of France," repeating to me-

Cave Hydra in the Louvr

A Review by
MAURICE FRANCIS EGAN.

DELPHI. By Frederik Poulsen, Keeper of the Classical Department of the Ny Carlsberg Glyptotek, Ancient Fellow of the French School at Athens. Translated by G. C. Richards, M. A., F. S. A., Fellow and Tutor of Oriel College, Oxford, with a preface by Percy Gardner, D. Litt., F. B. A., Lincoln and Morten Professor of Classical Archaeology and Art in the University of Oxford, Gyldendal, 11 Burleigh Street, Covent Garden, London, W. C. 2.

THE history of the Oracular Shrine at Delphi revealed by the comparatively recent excavation is partly the history of Greater Greece. The Delphic Sibyl (there were at times more than one, but as a rule there was one) was so highly honored that even Christian tradition treats her with reverence, and Michael Angelo did not hesitate to place her and her sisters in the Sistine Chapel. Besides, there are other evidences that these Sibyls received a kind of respect from Christians, even after their temples were destroyed. Dr. Poulsen's unique volume, which is not too learned for human nature's daily food, shows some most interesting phases of Greek life and brings minute domestic details of Greece, and later Rome, within our easy knowledge.

The greatest of the Grecians treated the Oracle of Delphi with respect; Plato and Aristotle did not hesitate to express publicly their belief in her prophecies, which were interpreted by a body of very learned and experienced priests. Dr. Poulsen shows us that the voice of the Oracle was all a rule in favor of the manlier virtues, and we are told by him that her influence was admirable even on those philosophers who were supposed to follow a semi-divine light and to be rather self-sufficing. And even these were not kept from human failings by those utterances which they received with such reverence. Aristophanes, for example, tells us that covetousness governed the great poets of Athens, and he seems to have a very poor opinion of them in other ways. However, one cannot help thinking that he was prejudiced even against Sophocles, probably because Sopochles may have had a certain leaning to prohibition, for the only author that Aristophanes praises unreservedly is Cratinus, "who died of grief at seeing the Spartans invade Attica and smash to bits a full wine cask."

Aristotle worked directly in the service of the Oracle; Plato believed that the influence of Apollo, the wandering god of Delphi, was important on religion, morality and legislation. Plutarch was in the official service of the Oracle, too, and even when the influence of Delphi had declined and degenerated Cicero consulted her, and Adrian insisted that his favorite, Antinous, should be admitted among the statues of the gods in the temple. It must be admitted that Delphi was not intolerant. All kinds of cults were welcome among her thousands of symbols. When Apollo was asked how a man could best serve the gods the answer came, "According to the custom and usage of thy city." It is no wonder that the excavators discovered many remains on the beautiful site of Delphi, for even after Nero had robbed the temple of 500 of its statues many thousands still remained.

As far down as A. D. 81 the Flavian Caesars did their best to restore the dying worship at Delphi. Julian the Apostate gave the priests his protection and remitted all taxation. But the answer of the Oracle was despondent: "Tell the Emperor that the bright citadel has fallen to the ground; Apollo has no longer any shelter or oracular laurel tree or speaking fountain; even the vocal stream has ceased to flow." In A. D. 390 Theodosius the Great suppressed the Oracle. This Emperor still feared the influence of the adoration of Apollo; Delphi did not become a centre of Christianity with its temples turned into Christian churches. Of all the cults of Greece and Rome that of Apollo was the strongest and most vigorous, although it was not Grecian in origin, but was transplanted from Asia Minor. The Emperor Arcadius "left nothing but the floor, the temple steps, some column drums, fragments of the architrave and triglyphs," Dr. Poulsen says, "a single metope, with traces of the Gallic shields, which after the victory over the Gallic hordes in 7D B. C. were hung up on the metopes of the south side, and finally fragments of the lion heads of the cornice."

It is interesting to know that the investigation of the temple foundations shows that the Holy of Holies of the Oracle was no bigger than a ship's cabin; this Adyton was like a small box contained in a bigger one, and was, like the rest of the temple, built of limestone, had a flat wooden ceiling and four smooth walls, one of which was pierced by a door. The interior floor surface measured only fifteen square meters. "In this quite small space," says Dr. Poulsen, "in which in antiquity there were consecrated weapons on the walls, a gilded statue of Apollo, and on the grave of Dionysius there are still remains of stone benches on which the inquirers sat, and a staircase leading down to the vault, where the tripod stood and under which ran the prophetic spring." This tripod was called "the common hearth of Hellas."

In the Iliad Apollo is evidently the enemy of the Greeks, and in the Homeric hymns to Apollo he is evidently rather a parvenu; but the Greeks finally gave him Zeus as a father, and the position of Apollo as a new and very great god is settled when Zeus offers him nectar. The laurel tree was his emblem. Euripides says that a laurel tree stood by the side of the cavern of Ge the Goddess even before Apollo took possession. It will be remembered, too, that when Apollo pursued Daphne she took the form of a laurel tree and thus escaped. The Pythia inhaled the fumes of the laurel burnt and made a source of inspiration in order that her soul might be lifted to the divine frenzy.

Curiously enough, the priestess might not be a learned or an experienced person in the ways of the world; she must have as far as possible an utter simplicity. For a time the Pythia was a young girl, but the priests for very good reasons decided that she must be of more mature age, and yet she was always dressed as a youthful damsel and expected to assume the airs of maidenhood. The priests of Apollo were her prophets. If the Pythia shrieked and foamed at the mouth the priest interpreted her in vocal syllables and made her articulate. In the beginning these interpretations were given in hexameters, but later the answers were in prose. Dr. Poulsen believes that the Pythia was ignorant and sincere and that her madness was genuine; he gives the priests of Apollo credit for great shrewdness and knowledge of affairs, but he does not venture an opinion as to whether they played tricks on the credulity of their clients or not.

There seems, however, to have been something more than mere frenzy on the part of the Sibyl, and if the priests were tricksters they were extraordinarily wise and potent tricksters, for from the beginning of the seventh century B. C. the Oracle of Delphi became not only the arbiter of the destinies of Greece, the directress of great men's minds, but the guiding star of the founders of its colonies. All the earlier Greek settlements in South Italy and Sicily were under the sovereignty of Apollo and from them Delphi retained the right to draw a certain part of her income, which gave a great revenue.

The valley around Delphi was poor and arid, but the temple itself was opulent and splendid. The Oracle proclaimed that primitive animism must be replaced by a gentler influence and that human life must be respected. She insisted that even the shedding of a slave's blood was murder. On the question of sexual morality the Pythia, interpreted by the priests, had nothing to say. The struggle of the Delphic Oracle against Hellenic paederasty produced no results. The gifts of famous courtesans were as welcome as the gifts of the pious. Phryne sent her gilded statue to the courtyard of the temple, and it was placed among the heroes.

The value of Dr. Poulsen's book is entirely apart from his opinions as to the sincerity of the Oracle and her priests. He is neither a mystic in the pagan nor in the Christian sense; but his exposition of the results of the recent excavation at Delphi and of their influence in determining our view of Hellenic life is at the moment priceless. A more important book may yet be written, and probably will be written, but this at present is the best exposition we have. Dr. Poulsen makes very reasonable and enlightened use, especially in his illustrations, of the Fouilles de Delphes, which appeared before the war.

The use of color by the Greeks comes very near to being explained by some of the "finds" mentioned in this volume. It seems a pity that Canova and Thorwaldsen, who until Rodin and his school made a new epoch, molded our impressions of Grecian statuary, should not have endeavored to discover those arts by which the Greeks made at least their portrait statues of later times expressive and lifelike.

scheduled for appearance. Museums have opened their doors and contributed robes of ancient Emperors, gowns of past beauties, relics of the early Christian Church. The genii of the movies will transport visitors to the picturesque factories of Nippon and then reel them through similar but more modern plants near home.

America is not a raw silk producing nation. We tried it years ago, when our forefathers attempted to compete with the skilled but cheap labor of the Orient and Europe by employing the uneducated Indian and negro hands. But the reeling of silk from the worm-spun cocoon is a delicate matter, as one can see at the Chinese and Japanese booths, where the little reeling girls from the Orient will demonstrate their skill. Most of the raw silk used in American factories is brought from those countries, where the ambitious silkworm was discovered in the days of the Mings. An interesting phase of the occasion will be the presence of a mission of representative merchants from the Far East. These travelers see fit to study our needs and our methods, that they may return to their own countries knowing how best to meet the demands of the American high-speed looms; how to conform their own product to suit the week-after-next proclivities of our twentieth century modes. America, in turn, admits her debt to the oldest nation by staging, in an Oriental setting, 500,000 yards of silk draped into a semblance of the bazaars of the long ago.

The pageant which unfolds the history of silk through the ages opens before the shrine of a Chinese temple, where a dancing moth flits from the mulberry tree planted in 2840 B.C. to begin its colorful journey to India, Japan, Persia and Byzantium; to Spain, Venice and Florence; to France and England, and finally to the United States, where the historic figures of the past become the manikins for the styles of 1921, as the laboriously woven fabrics of old run gayly through the modern loom of today and printing machines peel off sixty yards a minute in eight different colors. No one but an expert in silk production, perhaps, sees romance in the clattering machinery of an American factory, but, says the Chairman of the Historical Committee of the exhibition: "As a matter of fact, the newest fabric that comes from a loom has a history and pedigree more ancient than any written history. Every process of manufacture today is but the day's expression of the medium thrqugh which men have expressed their desires for more centuries than any one but the geologist is willing to admit." And he adds: "With a few exceptions, machine-made goods are finer in quality, more artistic in appearance, and more perfect in construction than hand-made goods."

If that be true, it is no wonder that Europe and Asia are sending official delegations to the show of 1921. America, of course, will show the latest machines for which she is famous and which have placed her in the lead as a silk manufacturing nation today—velvet looms, on public exhibition for the first time in this country; marvelous looms which are run like a pianola, with many busy shuttles bobbing in and out of the perforated design sheets, weaving the newest patterns of man's inventive mind; printing machines, ribbon looms, all that America has accomplished since the first silk weaving was introduced into Connecticut in 1737 or the crude machinery installed in the first silk mill erected on this continent by old Horatio Hanks in 1810.

Which of these two men has learned the secret of fifteen minutes a day?

The secret is contained in the free booklet offered below. Until you have read it you have no idea how much 15 minutes a day can mean in growth and success. Send for your copy now.

HERE are two men, equally good-looking, equally well-dressed. You see such men at every social gathering.

One of them can talk of nothing beyond the mere day's news. The other brings to every subject a wealth of side-light and illustration that makes him listened to eagerly.

He talks like a man who has travelled widely, though his only travels are a business man's trips. He knows something of History and Biography, of the work of great scientists, and the writings of philosophers, poets and dramatists.

Yet he is busy, as all men are, in the affairs of every day. How has he found time to acquire so rich a mental back-ground? When there is such a multitude of books to read, how can any man be well-read?

The answer to this man's success and to the success of thousands of men and women like him is contained in a free booklet that you may have for the asking. In it is told the story of Dr. Eliot's great library which, as one man expressed it, "does for reading what the invention of the telegraph did for communication." From his life-time of reading, study and teaching, forty years of it as President of Harvard University, Dr. Eliot tells just what few books he chose for the most famous library in the world; why he chose them and how he has arranged them with notes and reading courses so that any man can get from them the essentials of a liberal education in even fifteen minutes a day.

The booklet gives the plan, scope and purpose of

DR. ELIOT'S FIVE-FOOT SHELF OF BOOKS

The Fascinating Path to a Liberal Education.

Every well-informed man and woman should at least know something about this famous library.

The free booklet tells about it—how Dr. Eliot has put into his Five-Foot Shelf "the essentials of a liberal education," how he has so arranged it that even "fifteen minutes a day" is enough, how in pleasant moments of spare time, by using the reading courses Dr. Eliot has provided for you, you can get the knowledge of literature and life, the culture, the broad viewpoint that every University strives to give.

"For me," wrote one man who had sent in the coupon, "your little free booklet meant a big step forward, and it showed me besides the way to a vast new world of pleasure."

Every reader of this newspaper is invited to have a copy of this handsome and entertaining little booklet. It is free, will be sent by mail, and involves no obligation of any sort. Merely clip the coupon and mail it today.

Napoleon III., His Call of Destiny

The Prince Imperial.

Queen Hortense, Mother of Louis Napoleon.

NAPOLEON THE THIRD. The Romance of an Emperor. By Walter Geer. Illustrated. New York: Brentano's.

MR. GEER'S subtitle to his life of Napoleon III., "The Romance of an Emperor," means merely that that monarch's life was romantic. The author has not attempted to deal with it in any especially romantic manner, though he calls attention in passing to the fact that this or that fact or coincidence was dramatic. He does regard Louis Napoleon's elevation to the imperial throne as "a Call of Destiny," and says so. The idea that he would some day be Emperor never left Louis Napoleon, and he was open and frank about it; he never said "if," but always "when." Not even skepticism or laughter could depress his tone.

His attempts to seize the throne were laughable fiascos, and when he did seize it the French people were glad of it and ratified the act. As for the other peoples, they persisted in regarding Napoleon III. as a sabre rattler. He, on the contrary, was mainly occupied in improving the condition of the country. His mother, Queen Hortense, trained him to be an Emperor and was the centre of the plots that were continually weaving to keep the Bonapartist tradition alive. He was always despised until it was too late.

He had twice attempted a repetition of Napoleon the Great's swift march on Paris, and each time the attempt was a ridiculous failure. Mr. Geer, however, does not see anything disgraceful or ridiculous about the Strasburg fiasco in 1836. Prince Louis made the audacious attempt to repeat Napoleon's easy conquest of the troops at Grenoble, not exactly with a single sentence as his great predecessor did, but with a few troops who all deserted him when their officers frowned. Far worse, as Mr. Geer considers it, was the fiasco at Boulogne in 1840, where the Prince's men carried him by main strength back to the boat from which he had landed and forced him to swim out to it, only to get arrested with his whole party.

These failures did not discourage the Prince in the least, and in the end they favored his plans by causing his enemies to form an unwarrantably low estimate of him. The Government, which at his first attempt had merely banished him, now doomed him to perpetual imprisonment at the Castle of Ham. Here for five years he developed his intellect by study and by writing books and articles, and in after years he often spoke of his education at "the University of Ham." The Government of Louis Philippe, which shared the generally low estimate of his ability, intimated that he could have his liberty if he would ask for it. He replied, "I will not leave Ham except to go to the cemetery or the Tuileries." When he had stayed at the castle as long as he thought fit he escaped; and this should have been a warning to his enemies that there might be more in him than had been supposed. Before the news of his escape was out he turned up in London, appearing suddenly in the midst of a large party at Gore House, the residence of his old friend, Lady Blessington.

As soon as he learned the news of the Revolution of 1848 he went at once to Paris, but everybody advised him not to be a candidate and to go back to England. He stayed, and at the April elections not a voice was raised in his favor; but at the June elections, to the astonishment of the wiseacres, he was chosen as Deputy from four Departments. This unaccountable occurrence so alarmed the politicians that an amendment was proposed declaring members of the former Imperial and royal families of France ineligible as candidates for the Presidency of the Republic. Says Mr. Geer:

When he finally arose to speak some of the members called for a vote without hearing him. The member who occupied the tribune, however, yielded his place to his "honorable colleague, Louis Napoleon." Instantly there was complete silence; every one expected from his mouth a grave, solemn statement of his position. He pronounced a few rambling words, without any particular significance, and then descended from the tribune amidst a general laugh of derision. The most eloquent and carefully prepared address could not have better served his purpose. He cut such a sorry figure that Thouret contemptuously withdrew the amendment by which he had intended to bar Louis Napoleon from the Presidency.

And in December, 1848, Louis Napoleon was elected President by 5,400,000 votes. His nearest competitor, General Cavignac, received 1,500,000. He ruled wisely and patiently until December, 1851, when he suddenly took possession of Paris and appealed to the nation to ratify his proposals for a new Constitution. On Dec. 20 more than 7,000,000 voted in his favor and less than 700,000 against him. Even then, though an absolute monarch, he was slow to change his title, and did not do so until, on Nov. 21, 1852, the people had voted to make him Emperor, nearly 8,000,000 in the affirmative and only 250,000 in the negative. He had stood the test, for he had governed the people four years.

While in London he had published a book called "Napoleonic Ideas," in which he held that his uncle intended to safeguard the results of the Revolution, which he could only do as an autocrat. Having accomplished this work, he could then grant free institutions to France. That he did not carry out this second part of his plan was not his fault, but that of the reactionary nations of Europe, which continually warred upon him and finally upset the whole edifice at Waterloo. That his successor, Napoleon III., entertained such ideas, whether the first Napoleon did or not, throws light upon his policy as Emperor.

La Comtesse de Castiglione.

Particularly interesting is the way in which Mr. Geer relates the story of how Cavour brought Napoleon III. to the aid of Italy. The beautiful Comtesse de Castiglione was employed to interest the French Emperor. "Cavour," says Mr. Geer, "had been a great gambler all his life. In this game the beauty of Mme. de Castiglione was his trump card, and with it he won the game. She soon gained sufficient influence over Napoleon to persuade him to invite Cavour to be present at the Congress of Paris. With his trump card Cavour had won the first trick of the game of which the stake was to be the unity of the Kingdom of Italy. It would be absurd, of course, to claim that the influence of the lovely Comtesse was the decisive cause of the war, but there is much evidence to show that she greatly aided the plans of Cavour in deciding the wavering mind of the Emperor."

Much has been written about the personal charm of the Emperor. Mr. Geer does well in reproducing Queen Victoria's account of it:

> It is extraordinary how very much attached one becomes to the Emperor. He is so quiet, so simple, and even, so gentle, so full of tact, dignity and modesty. His society is particularly agreeable and pleasant; and there is something fascinating, melancholy and engaging, which draws you to him, in spite of any prevention you may have against him, and certainly without the assistance of any outward advantages of appearance, though I like his face. He undoubtedly has the most extraordinary power of attaching people to him. The children are very fond of him; to them also his kindness was very great, but, at the same time, most judicious.

The Art of the Mountaineer

A Review by
STANTON A. COBLENTZ.

MOUNTAIN CRAFT. Edited by Geoffrey Winthrop Young. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $7.50.

MOUNTAINEERING ART. By Harold Raeburn. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $3.75.

FROM the earliest times mountains have captivated the imagination of men. In their vastness, their majesty and mystery there is something irresistibly fascinating; and it is not the poets alone that succumb to their attraction. By primitive peoples they are often regarded as sacred; their inaccessible summits are worshipped as the homes of spirits, both terrible and benignant. In the conception of the ancient Greeks, Mount Olympus was the abode of Zeus; in the belief of the Hebrews, Moses came face to face with God on a mountain top. To the Japanese Mount Fuji-yama is a thing for reverence; to the Tibetan peasant Mount Everest is the goal of a yearly pilgrimage; to the dweller in the Caucasus Mount Mquinvari is sacred, possibly because it is there that Prometheus is supposed to have suffered martyrdom for mankind. And so, as Mr. Raeburn points out in the excellent historical introduction to his book, the worship of mountains develops from "a notion, often vague, perhaps, of spiritual forces."

Even at the present time, and among the most civilized of peoples, mountains are a source of awe and inspiration to those who have not a trace of the old superstitious veneration. A new art of mountain climbing has comparatively recently been cultivated, as is evident from the books both of Mr. Raeburn and of Mr. Young; and for the sheer joy and glory of the climbing, men have attacked and conquered some of the highest mountains on the globe. To do so, they have had to be masters of a distinct and elaborate climbing technique, which can be learned only by long study and practice; and to an outline of that technique both of the volumes under review are in large part devoted. However, even in the description of climbing methods and equipment there is much that is of interest not only to prospective climbers, but to those who have no intention of scaling even the Matterhorn. For, as Mr. Young remarks, "a mountaineer is not only one who climbs mountains, but any one who likes to walk, read or think about them."

In both volumes we are made to feel the pleasures and the hardships of climbing. We can experience the exultation of the rock-scaler who pulls himself up wall-like crags and cliffs; the delights as well as the monotonous drudgery of the Alpine party, whose members, roped together, ascend the steep snowfields and glaciers; the wonder and terror of the explorers that from the perilous vantage point of a peak observe the dazzling spectacle of an electrical storm. And, in Mr. Young's volume, we are acquainted not only with the glacier-clad Alps, but with mountain chains scattered throughout the world; we are taken to the Far North, and introduced to the sport of mountaineering on aki; we are transported to the giant Himalayas, and from the tropical foothills peer upward at the snowclad peaks that no man has ever surmounted; we are brought to the ranges of New Zealand, of Norway and of Corsica, to the Pyrenees and to the Canadian Rockies; we voyage to far-off Spitsbergen, and from its mountains view the August sunset, within whose pale rays the world for hours "shines pink in the lights and blue in the shadows"; and we are entranced there by "the pools and ice caverns of arctic glaciers, the strange blue river tunnels through the ice, the burst lakes scattering huge iceblocks afar, the curious sheaves of crystalline ice-rods, the rivers of water stained crimson * * * and flowing over the white, ice-like veins of jasper in marble, the frozen heaps of ice, in shape like volcanoes, which rise where springs force themselves out of the ground."

But, however wide the range of present-day exploration, we of the twentieth century are by no means the pioneers in mountain travel. Though the most notable feats of climbing have occurred within comparatively recent years, "the origin of mountain snow-pass travel," Mr. Raeburn informs us, "dates back to long before the beginning of history. * * * Well-known historic passes, from 18,000 to 20,000 feet high, are to be found in the Himalayas." This is particularly noteworthy in view of the fact mentioned by Mr. Raeburn that the greatest height yet attained is 24,000 feet, a record made in 1909 by the Duc d'Abruzzi and his three Italian guides on Bride Peak, in the Karakorams. D'Abruzzi did not reach the summit, yet exceeded by fully 600 feet the next highest record; and the facts presented by Mr. Raeburn indicate that it would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to far surpass this mark. For at great altitudes the climber suffers from what is known as "mountain lassitude," a sickness which the author describes as "an apathy of the mind, a creeping paralysis of the limbs"; and not even the most experienced mountaineer seems immune from the disease. Moreover, this failing appears to be beyond remedy, since "the heart is not big enough or has not yet learned to beat fast enough" to secure the necessary oxygen from the air. The fact that aviators have reached a height of over 30,000 feet does not seem to Mr. Raeburn to have any essential bearing on the case of the mountaineer, since aviators spend but a short time in the heights and inhale oxygen, while no definite methods for combating the effects of high altitude are known to the mountaineer.

Traverse, Side-Hold Adhesion, Basalt

The Alps.

But it is the very difficulties and hardships that make mountaineering fascinating. "The purely physical enjoyment of the struggle * * * the dangers of the ascent * * * the mental exhilaration of setting one's wits to discover the safe way to overcome the icy or rocky barriers" are, in Mr. Raeburn's opinion, among the prime attractions of the sport; and the occupation gains doubly in interest when we remember also the bonds forged "by long hardship on the same exquisite pleasure of splendid symphony struck from the and the sky by the the dawn," and the soul in the contem new horizons spread the splintered summit mating peak."

Lacemaking Replaces Knitting Since the W

OLD WORLD LACE; or, A Guide for the Lace Lover. By Clara W. Blum. Illustrated. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $10.

A REVIVAL of interest in lacemaking and lace appreciation appears to be in progress, if one may judge by the books about lace that are being published and the activities of those who are versed in the art of lacemaking. Several clubs and guides devoted to fine needlework, the making of lace and the teaching of both arts to young women have either been newly established or sprung into greater vigor within the last few years. This new book, which the author modestly describes as a guide for lace lovers, although she might have added that it is an inspiration toward appreciation of the beauty and interest of lace, is only one of several that have appeared rather recently. The Dutons, who publish this book, also brought out a little more than a year ago a very notable work on lace by Miss Gertrude Whiting, which, as "A Lace Guide for Makers and Collectors," treats the subject exhaustively on both its historical side and as a handicraft. Lacemaking is coming forward importantly, not only for the sake of its commercial consequence, but also for its artistic educational value and as a means for developing better self-mastery by those who are physically or mentally handicapped. Crippled mill hands, convalescent soldiers, inmates of insane and feeble-minded asylums, chronic patients in hospitals, convalescents from serious disease—with all these lacemaking has been found to have a physical and psychological value, and it is being widely used for that reason, while its commercial importance is recognized in the many handicraft courses and schools and clubs wherein lacemaking is taught to girls and women as a means of livelihood.

Mrs. Blum's very handsome and interesting book, however, is worked out on somewhat different lines from any of these purposes or previous volumes. Its narrative is particularly clear and interesting in its descriptions of the historical development of lacemaking in each of the European countries and of each kind of lace, with its distinguishing characteristics. Any one knowing little or nothing about lace can take up her little volume, and, with the aid of its many illustrations—there are nearly a hundred—can gain a fair degree of lace knowledge and appreciation. And no one can read it without a better understanding of the historical importance of lacemaking in the artistic and industrial development of Europe. But the volume is meant only for the ordinary person who does not want to go deeply into the history or the technicalities of lacemaking.

Lacemaking, or at least the making of what we call lace today, Mrs. Blum traces to the latter part of the fifteenth century and the early years of the sixteenth—that pregnant time when the forces that made the Renaissance were beginning to stir with new life the nations of Europe. "But from that time on," she says, "the rapid development was quite remarkable, for within a period of about fifty years lacemaking had taken its place in nearly all European countries as an acknowledged industry." The earliest examples are to be found in Italy, although several other countries began to make lace at about the same time. But in Italy it was the direct outcome of the drawn and cut work that had been made there for several previous centuries. The drawing of threads developed Reticella, and then soon followed the developments which quickly divided lace into the two great classes which continue to the present time—point or needle lace and bobbin or pillow lace.

Mrs. Blum devotes the greater part of her work to the three great lacemaking countries of the world, Italy, France and Flanders, but touches also upon the work of England and Spain and the modern revival of lacemaking in Ireland. It was Catherine de Medici, the Italian wife of Henry II., Mrs. Blum tells us, who introduced lacemaking into France about the middle of the sixteenth century. Her favorite pastime, as it was also of other Queens and the ladies of their Courts in France and in other countries, was the making of filet, or lacis, as it is sometimes called, which began to be made almost as soon as was the earliest drawnwork, and has continued in its original type until the present day. Catherine de Medici alone had 500 squares and strips of filet of her own making in her lace chests. But the first school of lacemaking was not opened in France until 1665, more than a hundred years later, when Louis XIV.'s famous Minister, Colbert, saw its possibilities as a national industry. To Alencon, a little town that was to become famous as a lacemaking centre and to give its name to some of the most beautiful of French laces, he brought skilled Italian lacemakers, paying them lavishly to teach Frenchwomen their art.

Lacemaking started in Flanders, says Mrs. Blum, about the same time as in Italy, and "Flanders at once became one of the largest lace centres of the world, and the marvelous skill and deftness of her workers made the industry a great source of great wealth quantity of lace she port." im some of the prejudices of American audiences, some of the crazes which they had outgrown, some of the manifestations of their highly developed faculty of criticising the pictures reeled off before their eyes.

The Spanish visitor expressed admiration for films depicting life in the Wild West. He was told that such things had had their day. Well, how about Oriental film stories? "Old stuff, old stuff."

Then his mind turned to Mexico as the place to lay his plots. Having just come from there, he was naturally much interested in Mexican character and local color. Once more, however, his American mentors poured cold water on his scheme; they told him that Mexican subjects were especially difficult to handle, one drawback being the delicate nature of the relations between the United States and official Mexico, which might bring serious trouble at any moment, and thus jeopardize the success with audiences of a production with the scene laid across the Rio Grande. When the enormous initial cost of a modern film spectacle is taken into consideration it is easy to understand the hesitancy of producers to touch anything involving extra uncertainty.

Blasco Ibáñez got this point at once. Without a struggle; he dropped his idea of writing Mexican stuff. He suggested something with the scene laid in Spain. Again his American acquaintances shook their heads. He suggested France. More skepticism. It was only natural that the Spaniard should want to lay his scenes in the European countries which were most familiar to him, and where he had laid most of the plots of his novels. But the Americans, with the prejudices of American audiences uppermost in their minds, shook their heads. This would have been enough to discourage the average writer trying to get a foothold in the field of moving pictures, but Blasco Ibáñes was not discouraged a bit.

"Why don't you try something with an American background, American characters, a plot based on modern American life?" he was asked.

"I will!" he said. And before he had set sail from American shores for Europe his mind was busy with plans to make his bow before American moving-picture audiences as the creator of something typically American.

In the years before his American tour Blasco Ibáñez had tasted plenty of fame as a writer. Long before he was swept into world-wide renown by the phenomenal success of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" he had become celebrated not only in his native Spain but all over Europe. One of his books, "Blood and Sand," appeared in the United States in an English version several years before the war. In addition to his literary activity, he had led a lively life as a politician in Spain, with an incurable habit of enunciating violently anti-monarchical convictions and getting thrown into jail as a consequence.

But of the life of the movies he knew next to nothing. Only one of his novels, "Blood and Sand," with its picturesque scenes from the life of the heroes of the bullring, had been adapted for the screen, but the adaptation had been done hurriedly and with much counting of the pennies of expense by the Frenchmen who undertook it for a total cost of something like $3,300.

From that modest beginning, Blasco Ibáñez was suddenly hurled into the midst of the tremendous preparations for a production that was to cost over $1,000,000. He saw more than 12,000 persons marshaled together for the reproduction of the scenes of his novel. He saw a careful copy of an entire French village, capable of housing 6,000 inhabitants, set up and destroyed by bombardment, while a dozen cameras clicked and "regiments" of soldiers surged through its streets. He saw new mechanical devices installed, a complete telephone system in operation to direct the movements of the army of actors. He saw assembled together art treasures from public and private galleries, lent by their owners, the insurance value of which was $275,000. He visited an armory, installed for providing the weapons needed by the "soldiers" engaged in a mimic battle of the Marne, a costume factory for turning out thousands of costumes, two machine shops for the needs of the builders of the "village" and the other scenes.

One of the things that particularly impressed the Spanish writer was the work of the director of all this maze of human beings and machinery. After watching him and his corps of assistants in action, the author of "The Four Horsemen" announced his desire of doing that sort of work himself some day.

"I want to direct the screening of something written by me," he told the Americans who were showing him around. They smiled. They pointed out that directing a moving-picture production was a special sort of task. They showed him fourteen assistant directors, all working simultaneously to help the head director get "The Four Horsemen" ready for the screen. Little by little Blasco Ibáñes's enthusiasm to be a movie director cooled down. It dawned on him that it wouldn't take much personal directing to knock out any plans he might have for writing novels and scenarios. So he said no more about his new ambition.

But he remained firm in his determination to write direct for the screen. So great was his enthusiasm, in fact, that he probably would have sat down right here in the United States to finish out the two stories which he had sketched out in his mind as a result of his visits to American studios, if urgent business abroad, coupled with the illness of his son, had not forced him to hurry away to Europe. However, he said that as soon as he could finish some articles on Ireland which he had arranged to write, and wind up some other matters, he would turn his attention to the new line of work for which America had suddenly provided the inspiration.

The Spanish novelist will probably pay us his next visit in the Autumn of this year. Since arriving in Europe on his return from his tour of the United States and Mexico he has received photographs of all the scenes of "The Four Horsemen" as they will appear on the screen within a few weeks, and has written to the producers a letter in which he lavishes enthusiastic praise on the production.

It seems quite appropriate for Blasco Ibáñez to be mixed up with the most colossal of screen productions. Ever since he began his career as a successful novelist there has been something big about the effects which he has achieved. When I was in Spain last Summer I heard much talk of the author of "The Four Horsemen" among his compatriots, and almost everywhere this idea of bigness came out. Once a group of Spanish literary men were listening to the reading of a letter describing his career of triumph in the United States.

"Oh, trust him to make a million dollars!" was one comment. Another time, at dinner, a Spanish writer said to me:

"Whatever may be said against him, he conceives and executes big, bold things. He is like a sculptor modeling statues full of roughness but big in every way, while his contemporaries are engaged in turning out pretty Tanagra figures, charming and delicate and lovely, but little."

So it is quite in character to see him the hero of a colossal moving picture. Already producers of "The Four Horsemen" say they have spent a little short of $1,200,000 on it, and the estimate of the total cost runs as high as $1,500,000—several hundred thousand dollars more than the figures quoted for even the most expensive previous productions. The era of high prices, of course, accounts for a part of the difference.

Probably other novels by Blasco Ibáñez will appear on the screen before long, now that "The Four Horsemen," has paved the way. When the Spanish author was in this country he spoke about making scenarios of some of his other works in addition to writing direct for the movies. The great vogue of "The America's "Cultural Humility"

THE HISTORY OF A LITERARY RADICAL. By Randolph Bourne. B. W. Huebsch, Inc. $2.

RANDOLPH BOURNE was one of the finest intellects in America. He had not wholly found himself at his death, and it is idle to surmise what he would have done had he lived. His interests were wide and many things called to him. He was a literary critic of great acumen, a student of those forces that carry on into new achievements, and an intent observer of the political and sociological phenomena of the times. His physical drawbacks, if anything, intensified his mental activity, and through all his work is perceptible an invigorating courage and uncompromising zest that are unmistakable.

"The History of a Literary Radical" is a book that includes work that shows best of all the creative and critical side of the man. Besides the essay from which the volume takes its name there are included six imaginary portraits that are delicious in conception and the clarity with which they show varying aspects of the New Youth in America, a fragment of a novel that promised to be an exceptional thing, and essays on such subjects as "Our Cultural Humility," "A Mirror of the Middle West," "The Puritan's Will to Power," "The Immanence of Dostoevsky," "The Art of Theodore Dreiser," and "The Uses of Infallibility." It is a book that proclaims much, for it exhibits what an astute and genuine critical ability has been lost this country and it also shows us ourselves in an able and brilliant manner. Van Wyck Brooks's introduction to the book is a fine piece of writing, a worthy threshold to the work that lies beyond.

If we are to receive any adequate knowledge of the mind and thought of Randolph Bourne we can, perhaps, find examples in such essays as "Our Cultural Humility." Here the man attempted to lay his finger on the pulses of literary America and diagnose for us our troubles. It is our humility before the work of the Old World that is our bane, cried Randolph Bourne. Our eager, inexhaustible interest in the output of Europe has deadened us to the achievements that exist at home. When we turn emphatically to our own artists, our own men of letters, and encourage them by an atmosphere of attention and respect they will grow into those phoenixes that we desire. Our goal and ideal of culture has made us parasites, he cries.

For the truth is that the definition of culture, which we have accepted with such devastating enthusiasm, is a definition emanating from that very barbarism from which its author recoiled in such horror. If it were not that all our attitude showed that we had adopted a quite different standard, it would be the merest platitude to say that culture is not an acquired familiarity with things outside, but an inner and constantly operating taste, a fresh and responsive power of discrimination, and the insistent judging of everything that comes to our minds and senses. It is clear that such a sensitive taste cannot be acquired by torturing our appreciations into conformity with the judgments of others, no matter how "authoritative" those judgments may be. Such a method means a hypnotization of judgment, not a true development of soul.

Going further, he positively posits that "our cultural humility before the civilizations of Europe, then, is the chief obstacle which prevents us from producing any true indigenous culture of our own." This thought has been expressed before, but not in quite the same way that Mr. Bourne brought it out. It is true enough that the last few years have witnessed an increasing group of writers who have lost what Mr. Bourne called "our cultural humility" and set defiantly enough to work to produce a literature that might be called American first of all. But these workers are still in the minority, and it is a recognizable fact that American letters still suffers from the European influence.

According to Bourne, the only remedy for this sad state of affairs is the cultivation of a new American nationalism. We need, he declared, that keen introspection into the beauties and vitalities and sincerities of our own life and ideals that characterizes the French. "When shall we learn to be proud?" he cries. "For only pride is creative." It is by this attitude in our critics and writers that art in America is going to progress, is even slowly progressing now. Such men as Bourne are flaring torches that set us right when we have gone a grievous way from the true road; that only road which Bourne chooses to call "American nationalism." There can be no prouder phrase, and it is that which must be cultivated.

This book is in the nature of a farewell offering from a man who is now dead, and no finer appreciation of Bourne may be secured than the last paragraph of Van Wyck Brooks's gravely beautiful introduction to the scattered writings of his dead friend, now collected in final form. Mr. Brook writes:

To have known Randolph Bourne is indeed to have surprised some of the finest secrets of the American future. But those who lived with him in friendship will remember him for reasons that are far more personal, and at the same time far more universal, than that; they will remember him as the wondrous companion, the lyrical intellect, the transparent idealist, most of all, perhaps, as the ingenuous and lonely child. It is said that every writer possesses in his vocabulary one talismanic word which he repeats again and again, half consciously, like a sort of signature, and which reveals the essential secret of his personality. In Bourne's case the word is "wistful," and those who accused him of malice and bitterness, not realising how instinctively we impute these qualities to the physically deformed who are so dauntless in spirit that they repel our pity, would do well to consider that secret signature, sown like some beautiful wild flower over the meadow of his writings, which no man can counterfeit, which is indeed the token of their inviolable sincerity. He was a wanderer, the child of some nation yet unborn, smitten with an unappeasable nostalgia for the Beloved Community on the far side of socialism; he carried with him the intoxicating air of that community, the mysterious aroma of all its works and ways. "High philosophic thought infused with sensuous love," he wrote once, "is not this the one incorrigible dream that clutches us?" It was the dream he had brought back from the bright future in which he lived, the dream he summoned us to realize. And it issues now like a gallant command out of the space left vacant by his passing.

This is saying much for a man, but it is not saying too much for a man of the intellectual calibre of Randolph Bourne. Mr. Brooks points out that he was a sort of clearing house of the best living ideas of the time. It was through him that the young writer and thinker met on common ground to fashion their achievements. He was a rallying cry; it was his urge that radicals should be thinkers as well as radicals. During the last two years of his life he was obsessed with the precariousness of free thought in this country, according to Mr. Brooks. I think that this is evident time and again in his writings. He was brave and uncompromising, and the lessening of free speech was a serious matter with him. It is the belief of Mr. Brooks that had Bourne lived he would have confined himself more and more to cultural criticism. It would have been his object in life to aid in the shaping of a new, consistent American literature, a field of letters that would have been impregnated with what he termed "American nationalism."

The man is dead now and nothing remains of him but a few books. In those few books, however, is concentrated the youth, the vivid flair for sincerity, the adamantine resolve for a national expression, that is the precious portion of young America.

Randolph Bourne.

Seventh American Greek Theatre

COMPLETION this Spring of the Paul Goodloe McIntire open-air amphitheatre at the University of Virginia will bring the total number of modern Greek theatres in this country up to seven. At present the majority of modern Greek theatres are to be found in a single State on the opposite side of the world from Greece—California. The reason is not far to seek, as weather reports show a rainless season for four months and four additional months that are "generally fair." The California Greek theatres are at Berkeley, Point Loma, Bakersfield and Claremont.

The two other Greek theatres in America, in addition to the one at the University of Virginia, are located at Cranbrook, the country seat of George G. Booth, near Detroit, Mich., and at Garfield Park, Chicago.

All seven of the theatres have been built since 1900 in response to the increasing demand for outdoor spectacles and because of the revival of interest in the Greek drama.

The modern Greek theatre is suitable for the presentation of plays rendered impossible by reason of bad acoustics in such structures as the Harvard Stadium and the Stadium of the College of the City of New York. The Amphitheatre at the University of Virginia, designed by Fiske Kimball, is being erected at a cost of $85,000. With a great organ, now in the process of installation, the cost will be in excess of $104,000.

Fringed by the Blue Ridge Mountains and overshadowed by the classic outlines of other university buildings, the McIntire Amphitheatre will resemble in many respects the famous Baboli Gardens in Florence. On occasions requiring the full seating capacity of 3,000, the central space is to be filled with movable chairs. For dancing or pageants—such as is planned for the initial performance in connection with the University's Centennial celebration in June—the central area will be wholly or partly free.

The stage building, a structure independent like the Greek stage, has its platform backed by a wall with Doric pilasters and flanked by masses containing the organ chamber and the dressing rooms. Palladian proportions and details are strictly followed in the order, in an endeavor to keep the special flavor of the forms of the old buildings.

The stage itself, eighty-five by twenty-one feet, is raised three feet above the arena at its centre. Access from the side and rear is gained by five doorways. At the right are dressing rooms in two stories, with stairs to a basement under the stage for storage. In the banks of seats, special effort has been made to secure uniformity of appearance.

The final design of the auditorium is a long, semicircular bank of concrete seats terminated by balustrades and hedges about a central space of greensward. While Virginia's amphitheatre has less than half the seating capacity of the theatre at Berkeley, it adheres more strictly to the old Grecian style of architecture. The California structure shows a curious mingling of the Greek and Roman forms. The general form of this building is Roman, in that the auditorium outline forms only slightly more than a semicircle and the orchestra circle is cut down to small dimensions.

The other Greek theatres in America are all considerably smaller than Virginia's. That at Point Loma seats about 2,500, and some of the others have accommodations for but a few hundred persons.

Betty Wales Dresses

Betty Wales Dresses beautify not only youth, but those who would remain youthful.

This year there is introduced for the younger girl a new and winsome collection of frocks under the name of Betty Wales Junior. They carry the same unconditional guarantee as Betty Wales Dresses for misses and women.

Two styles of Betty Wales Dresses are illustrated. In the taffeta model on the left, cut-work embroidery is an attractive feature of the apron tunic. The basque effect waist is adorned with daintily embroidered batiste medallions, and a jaunty bow and sash at the back. The other is a novelty frock of tricotine in jumper effect. Frills trim the separate blouse of georgette, and silver buckles on the shoulder straps and pockets add a smart touch.

Betty Wales Dresses are sold in only one store in each vicinity.

This chair, or the word Danersk, appears on every piece of our furniture.

Furniture decorated with exquisite artistry in colors of your own selection

WHEN Catherine of Braganza brought to England lacquered cabinets as part of her dowry, she gave royal approval to color in furniture. In a later century, Sheraton and Chippendale made their most charming contributions to English furniture through the use of color as an essential part of the design.

In Danersk furniture you can find color and artistry as exquisite as in those lovely pieces made by the great cabinetmakers of the 18th century. The choice and beautiful Danersk designs are not the result of haphazard inspiration. Our artists go to the source in every instance; frequently the inspiration for Danersk furniture is derived from the rare and lovely things found at the Metropolitan Museum, where certain of our pieces are even now on exhibition.

It is our purpose to make furniture so interesting, so appropriate for the choice American homes of today, that if you are planning one room or many, you cannot possibly afford to purchase without first acquainting yourself with what we offer.

Danersk furniture is made in the natural woods—mahogany, walnut and oak—as well as in the painted finishes. We also make luxurious overstuffed pieces.

Our factories are at Stamford, Conn. There one can see every step, from the piling of rare woods in the yard to the joining, finishing and artistry of the completed objects.

Let us help you plan your rooms. The same careful attention will be given to your order whether you purchase from your dealer, decorator or direct from us.

Blue green is the body color of this Windsor bedroom group. The design theme appears only on the bands and knobs, which are done in black lacquer.

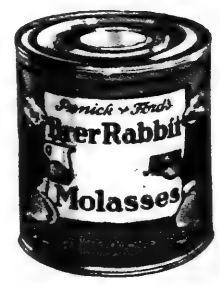
The light and the dark varieties of Brer Rabbit are equally delicious in flavor



You can now have an old-time delicacy

THE rich mellowness of real plantation molasses in your gingerbread. Hot, delicious, filling the air with fragrance!

For that was the secret of the tantalizing flavor that made famous the gingerbread of old-time Southern cooks. It was that flavor of home-made molasses. Then open kettles of juice from fresh-crushed sugar cane used to bubble over crackling bonfires—cane-crushing time with every one on the plantation watching their chance for a sly spoonful of that luscious molasses!

Today the famous old-time delicacy is yours again. Twenty-two years ago two Louisiana boys decided to restore that bygone Southern delicacy—genuine sugar cane molasses. Spurred on by delicious memories, they revived their plantation days and put up a molasses so fragrant, so full flavored, so sweet and pure that the first taste carries you back to childhood joys.

And they named it Brer Rabbit, in honor of the hero in the plantation stories of their childhood.

Today it is the most popular molasses in America. So successful have they been that Penick & Ford have become the largest packers of sugar cane products in the world.

One taste and you know the difference its flavor makes in your cooking! Try it in your gingerbread—that old-time flavor!

You can get Brer Rabbit at your grocer's—both the light molasses (gold label—for table use as well as for cooking) and the dark molasses (green label—a stronger flavor for cooking). Penick & Ford, Ltd., New Orleans.

The Customary January Sale of China and Table Crystal

Discounts of 10% to 50% are the rule

EVERY year during January, Ovington's offers to New York hostesses some rather remarkable values in china and table glassware.

These reductions are all the more marked because the original prices were never high, substantial values and good merchandise being the 75 year old rule at Ovington's.

But, during January, even these fair prices are lowered and everything from a finger-bowl to a dinner set is subject to discounts of 10% to 50%.

Why do your children stand at the window?

It's a pretty sight—the children's faces pressed against the window—until you realize they're thirsting for clean air and sunlight. And so are you.

Children and grown folks, at San Diego, the sparkling seaside city of Southern California, live out-of-doors all year, surrounded by green lawns and ever-changing flowers and free from storms and cold. For the whole year the normal annual temperature is 61 degrees, with never a cold spell or a hot wave to shatter the new adventures of each new day.

Here, by blue bay and ocean, every day becomes an opportunity for exhilarating enjoyment. With sunshine and the salty fragrance of the soft seabreeze, your motor luncheon by the seashore, or overlooking land and sea from nearby mountain passes, your golf, tennis, motoring, hunting, seabathing, and the social relations of 90,000 hospitable residents become a natural, delightful part of daily life.

There's year-'round health and vigor for all the family in a permanent home at

PLAYS AND PLAYERS OF THE NEW YORK THEATRE

Second Thoughts on First Nights

By ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT.

THE morning after the premiere of "Rollo's Wild Oat" at the Punch & Judy Theatre it was reported in this newspaper that a delightful comedy had come to town and that a company right in nearly all the rôles had been assembled for it, but that this company, perhaps because of vague and distrait direction, perhaps because of insufficient rehearsal, had put the piece in jeopardy on the opening night by giving a singularly bad performance. A visit to the Punch & Judy six weeks later justified that first, fine, careful rapture. "Rollo's Wild Oat," now smoothly and piquantly played, is revealed as a play written by Clare Kummer at her best—an engaging and exceedingly diverting comedy.

It has been generally so reported, yet through the comment of the succeeding weeks has run a thread of discontent with the play on the grounds that it is thin and unsubstantial. This is one of the most interesting illusions of our theatre—the notion, induced by transfering to her material the feather-lightness of her touch, that the Clare Kummer comedies are thin in the sense of being anaemic, when they are really thin in the sense that a fine china cup is thin, or daintily made sandwiches. It is, to use an arrantly flattering simile, like the illusion of grace and imponderability with which the French churchbuilders were once able to endow mighty columns of stone. Or, to snatch a metaphor which will not confuse even the ignorantly educated, you might say that Clare Kummer had the thinness of Chesterton.

The illusion is partly wrought by the impish humor which dances over her plays with something of the irresponsibility of the light reflected from the mirror in a small boy's hand. This humor, so often delicious, is occasionally mere aimless playfulness, as unpremeditated as a kitten's, and it afflicts minds of a certain seriousness as might mere prattle—Lola prattle, perhaps.

Even such minds are sometimes beguiled into following her until they find themselves accepting as quite commonplace such Kummeresque speeches as that in which Rollo says soothingly to his little sister: "Don't cry and I'll introduce you to an actor," or that in which his grandfather orders: "Lay out a bright, cheerful suit of pajamas for Hamlet, Bella." These are her triumphs and those who resent them would best turn back at the door of any theatre over which the name of Clare Kummer shines out into the night. Her plays are not for them.

You can know in advance, for these plays are all alike—all alike, that is, in the sense that Parrish landscapes and McMein covers and Leyendecker advertisements are all alike. You can't mistake them. Indeed, Clare Kummer is the only American playwright with a style so recognizable that you could spot her authorship by listening to a single scene.

Suppose you were to stray into the Punch & Judy just in time to hear Rollo, in tale-bearing mood, reporting his sister's misdeeds to their truculent grandfather.

"Lydia says a beautiful thing has come into her life and she means him and we've got to do something about it."

"Have him taken to the station," suggests the old man, hopefully, and by then you have heard enough to know who wrote the play. That little trysting note which the old man sends to Goldie—"Meet me near the large chair in the sitting room at 10:30 promptly"—could not possibly have been written by Augustus Thomas, for instance; and who but Clare Kummer could be suspected of having written the speech in which Rollo says: "I had two Aunt Annas, so grandfather decided to call one by her last name. That was Aunt Lane. She was very angry and she came to see grandfather about it and she's lived with us ever since."

And no other American playwright could for one moment be suspected of having given birth to the heroine of "Rollo's Wild Oat," that diffident and reluctant actress, Goldie Macduff. She is an enchanting Kummerism. Her only fault is that she doesn't think she can play Ophelia, but, as Rollo points out, when you think of other people's faults, that isn't much. She has gone on the stage because she was born there, but she can't even accept a modest rôle in "The Midnight Riot" because she does get so terribly sleepy about 12 o'clock. She doesn't enjoy acting anyway and is much happier at less exacting tasks, like putting initials on things, for instance. Rollo sympathizes utterly with her obstinate refusal to speak that indelicate line of Ophelia's about the "puff'd and reckless libertine." Listen to him: "If Miss Macduff had told Shakespeare that Ophelia wouldn't have said that, he'd have said, 'Wouldn't she?' that's all. He'd have changed it. He was a nice fellow, you know. Nothing godlike or disagreeable about him. And there's no reason why, just because he's dead, Ophelia should go on saying that line. 'Puff'd and reckless libertine' is rather disgusting. Sounds more like Polonius. What I want Miss Macduff to do is to act like Ophelia, not like an actress playing Ophelia."

Indeed, right in the midst of a scene supposed to be so frothy that a breath would blow it from the stage, you come unaccountably on the most compact and telling criticism of traditional Shakespearean acting which contemporary literature affords, come upon it in the electric moment when Rollo's casting of Goldie comes under the austere Lady Deadlock eye of Mrs. Bark Gales, the somewhat battered but extremely experienced actress whom he has chosen for the Queen. Goldie is just such a slip of a girl as died for love of the sweet Prince, so it is small wonder that Mrs. Gales recoils in surprise and asks freezingly: "Isn't she rather young for Ophelia?"

Only Clare Kummer could have given us Goldie Macduff, and a second visit to the Punch & Judy reinforces the conviction that only Lotus Robb should ever be allowed to play her. It is quite the happiest meeting of part and player that the season has witnessed and it requires severe repression to keep from describing her in terms of Springtime and all the trailing arbutus that ever rejoiced the world. The adept Roland Young, for whom the comedy was written, is capital as Rollo, of course, and yet there is so much real Willie Baxterism in the rôle that it would be interesting to see it played by some one of less mature and cerebral aspect and quality. By Gregory Kelly, for instance.

Third Thoughts.

ANOTHER play which was afflicted at its première by woefully insufficient preparation was "Miss Lulu Bett," which, brilliantly cast to begin with, has since been radically rewritten, vigorously pruned, considerably readjusted in all matters of focus and emphasis, and, incidentally, studied—all part of a process which might better have preceded the première. By now it has gained greatly in animation and force and color. Much of it is genuinely and finely entertaining, and, in the character of old Mrs. Bett, as imagined, as written and as acted, the play brushes greatness. But as a whole, it is still clumsy and a little weak, and the improvement noted does not at all include the conventionalized love interest which has been affixed to the story as with adhesive tape. As the last act stands at this writing, Ninian now returns for a routine finale embrace. If, and as soon as, the piece is further altered to show the nuptials of Cornish and Monona, the change will be duly reported here.

Such second visits to the plays of bygone weeks are more easily managed in the January lull, and so it was possible to look in on "Little Old New York" the other evening and find it largely unchanged, the same pretty and pleasing comedy which has been pre-empting the Plymouth since last Summer.

A return to "The Tavern," that obstinate success at the Cohan, leaves your correspondent quite unconvinced. As a travesty it still seems beneath contempt, a rubber-stamp satire not on the foibles of the theatres round about, but on melodrama of the early "Two Orphans" epoch. But in the second act it does boil over into a fine froth of that nonsense of which Cohan is master, and, in the second apparition of the sheriff with the body over his shoulder, it achieves a superb climax. It is a little too bad that its final twist should have to make sport of the insane and set up a jeer at what is, after all, a recognizable and pitiful pathological condition. This is too much like hooting a cripple, a base appeal to the urchin that is in us all. "The Tavern" is capitally staged and played, with Brandon Tynan much more happily cast as the vagabond than ever Arnold Daly was.

Last Week.

THE week just past brought three new plays to town—two of them the somewhat condescending works of men previously known rather as critics than as writers of the drama.

William Archer, who has condescended to write in "The Green Goddess" an extraordinarily entertaining thriller of brazenly popular values, has been a dramatic critic for so many years that most of us had forgotten him in any other capacity, forgotten his own confessions of previous attempts at play-writing, forgotten even his collaboration with Shaw on "Widowers' Houses" back in the '80s. In the new fashion of the English playwrights, he has brought his piece to New York for its first production, and Winthrop Ames has mounted and staged it as sumptuously and as carefully as if it were a rare and important work of dramatic literature. Into its central rôle, that of a disdainful, elegant and wicked rajah, George Arliss has settled back with the comfortable sigh of one whose heart murmurs within him: "Home at last."

Then Hatcher Hughes, lecturer on the drama at Columbia, is co-author with Elmer Rice of this "Wake Up, Jonathan," a pretentious but somewhat pallid and paltry play, wherein at least a trace of condescension is apparent in its stale slang and rather effortful jocosity. It does serve to bring Mrs. Fiske back to town. It must be quite ten years since this brilliant actress has blessed or been blessed with a really fine play, but in that interval she has had several richly delightful rôles and this time even that is denied her and us. Her present comedy can be earnestly recommended only to those (of whom the writer is one) who would rather hear Mrs. Fiske recite the multiplication table than endure her absence from the stage—a declaration of faith which would be a trifle misleading if it suggested that "Wake Up, Jonathan" is so very much less trite and monotonous than the multiplication table. Much of it to be sure becomes entertaining under her magic touch and it is amazing how much of sparkle and vitality and character she can impart to her scenes, a feat in which she is quite unaided, since the company assembled for this vehicle of hers ranges from the tolerable to the intolerable. Vehicle, however, is hardly the word to use for something which does not carry her but which she must carry—on her head, as a laundress does the wash. "Well," said the disconcerting Girl from the Next Flat, "it certainly is a joy to see and hear her again. But however did she happen to appear in such a play? Do you suppose she read it before it was produced?"

The third offering of the week—a piece called "Dear Me," which was launched at the Republic on Monday night, must be described here with a phrase borrowed from Life's sometimes extremely confidential guide to the theatres—the phrase: "Notice Later."

QUOTH THE BOSTON HERALD.

Mr. Belasco and Mr. Dillingham probably will be writing to The Boston Herald. "Interesting plays are holding over," says that newspaper, "but 'One' and 'Apple Blossoms' are now in their last week."

In the Mail Bag

Mr. Aborn on the Gallery.

To the Dramatic Editor:

Where are the gallery audiences of yesteryear? Are they becoming, like the dodo, extinct? What is the reason for the lack of interest in the cheaper price tickets of Broadway theatres?

In my experience as a theatrical manager, covering many years, and more especially in the production and presentation of comic and grand opera at popular prices, I have always felt that the gallery was the backbone of the theatre. The element that bought the cheaper price ticket in the theatre went to the gallery because they could secure entertainment at a price within their means. As their income increases they naturally purchase higher-priced seats. The scale of prices in the theatre has been increased so materially, and the opportunity for charging a higher rate of admission on orchestra seats has become so much greater, theatre managers have paid so little attention to the gallery that it has reached the point where the upstairs of a theatre has become a desert.

This condition is so acute that many managers who are building theatres are eliminating the gallery altogether. I feel that this is a big mistake; that, in order to encourage theatregoing, managers should use every effort to get people to sit in the gallery; afford to the occupants of these seats the same consideration as they do those who sit on the main floor. I am not surprised that people hesitate about going to the top of the house, for in many instances they must climb steep stairs; sit in uncomfortable chairs; use the back entrance; are not even furnished with regular programs, but slips of paper, and, in fact, the entire attitude is that of "we don't want you and we are doing everything we can to discourage your coming here."

There are many theatres throughout the country that don't sell reserved seats for the gallery, but make those who want to come there stand in line, out in the cold, and wait until 7:30 to buy what is known in the profession as "rush tickets." I think that something should be done by theatre managers to remedy this condition. I have also found that the best advertisers of your show are those who sit in the top of the house. If theatre managers will make the price of their gallery seats within the resources of those who would like to patronize legitimate attractions, instead of going to the movies, we will find a return to the gallery audiences that are necessary for the perpetuation of the theatre as an institution.

SARGENT ABORN.

A Deburau Anecdote.

To the Dramatic Editor:

In the mass of comment which has followed the production of "Debureau" (as the name seems to have been commonly spelled, in English notices, at least, before this production), I have looked for the famous incident with George Sand and Alfred de Musset, which, if it has been recalled, has escaped my rural notice. The story was related many years ago by Georg Brandes, who seldom relates anything for which he has not good authority, and was as follows:

"In the earliest stages of their intimacy George Sand and Alfred de Musset thought it would be a fine idea to invite Paul de Musset to dinner. So George Sand sent the invitation in a very casual manner, as if she alone were the hostess, while Alfred de Musset was disguised as a young Normandy servant girl and in that disguise waited on table through the whole dinner, unrecognized by any of the guests.

"To add to the fun, however, M. Lerminier, a well-known professor of philosophy, was invited, as was also our friend Debureau, whom none of the other guests had ever seen out of costume, and who was introduced as a member of the English House of Commons charged with secret diplomatic duty to the Court of Austria.

"Of course the conversation was deliberately turned toward international politics, and Debureau kept in character perfectly, largely by being wholly noncommittal. After names like Sir Robert Peel, Lord Stanley and others had been mentioned without any opinion from Debureau, some one spoke of the European 'balance of power,' to which Debureau suddenly said: 'Would you like to know my idea of the European balance of power at this moment?' At which the august 'diplomat' suddenly whirled his plate spinning into the air and then caught it, still spinning, on the point of his knife."

Whether this exact feat is possible in the science of juggling I do not know, but the main facts of the story seem to be undoubted, and, anyway, the story is worthy of being resurrected.

PHILIP CURTISS.

Norfolk, Conn., Jan. 17, 1921.

What the Ghosts Will Wear.

To the Dramatic Editor:

Why don't the critics lay more emphasis or, the incorrect dressing of certain characters, and also on the coming to life of the dead to make bows? The latter inartistic custom, I am afraid, will never change, and I am beginning to learn to look with composure on gray Suède French heels climbing mountain passes and Wild West schoolmarms dressed like Vogue models. But a beautiful play was nearly spoiled for me the other evening by the ghost of the heroine coming back to bow through the very window from which she had a moment before made her weird exit.

She had slipped on a gray negligée, so I suppose the ghost of a maid hovered behind the scenes. I have never seen advertised, at the sales, negligées for ghosts, but there evidently are such things (reduced to nothing, I suppose). If I ever can afford it, I shall offer through your columns a generous prize to any star who is willing to bow to the inevitable, instead of the audience.

BEATRICE HERFORD.

New York, Jan. 17, 1921.

Mr. Rice Makes a Correction.

To the Dramatic Editor:

May I obtrude myself upon you long enough to correct an erroneous impression? Your review of "Wake Up, Jonathan" suggests that I joined the manuscript "late in its history." That is not the case. I have been associated with the play since its inception—long before there ever was a manuscript.

I venture to make this correction in fairness to Mr. Hughes. The guilt of authorship is chargeable to us jointly. I have no desire to evade responsibility for my share. Whatever sins have been committed, be they upon my head also.

When some future H. G. Wells adds another chapter or two to the world's history, I cannot believe that he will regard, as of cosmic importance, the facts relating to the authorship of "Wake Up, Jonathan!" But I thought that you, in your capacity of a meticulous chronicler of the theatre, might find the matter to be of passing interest.

News and Gossip of the Rialto

ALTHOUGH there is nothing at all definite about it as yet, it seems likely that Arnold Daly and Joseph Schildkraut will appear here together this Spring. Mr. Daly is considering the revival of Shaw's "Man of Destiny," and on the same bill he would present a play by Karl Schönherr in which Mr. Schildkraut would have the principal rôle. The Schönherr play—Herr Schönherr is the "Carl Schoner" who is credited with "Thy Name Is Woman"—is entitled "The Children's Tragedy." Mr. Schildkraut, if the plan goes through, would also play the rôle of the Lieutenant in the Shaw play.

At this writing it seems likely that the title rôle of Drinkwater's "Mary Queen of Scots" will be played by Kathleen MacDonnell, who has appeared in New York but infrequently in the past, and has generally had the misfortune to alight upon a bad play. Another possibility for the part—although it is understood that Miss MacDonnell has signed a contract—is Clare Eames, now playing Queen Bess in "The Prince and the Pauper."

A new play by Zoe Akins, entitled "The Lady in Waiting," is about to be placed in rehearsal by Arthur Hopkins. This is the comedy in which Miss Akins satirizes the artistic temperament and plays thereon. Her heroine, an operatic prima donna, will have the distinction of the greatest first-act entrance which has ever fallen to the lot of an actress.

Willard Mack, who is alternately feverishly active in the theatre, and absolutely quiet, will reappear in a play of his own authorship at the Greenwich Village Theatre a week from to-morrow night. This is "Near Santa Barbara," a California melodrama in which Clara Joel will be prominently cast. It is the play which was recently tried on the road under the title of "Her Man," and which was presented in Chicago last season as "Poker Ranch." During the week beyond this also there will be new midnight entertainments on New York's two most celebrated roofs—the Century and the New Amsterdam.

Mr. Belasco, according to the rumor factory, is preparing to revive Eugene Walter's "The Easiest Way" next season with an all-star cast. In fact, he has already begun to assemble his cast. Frances Starr, of course, will have her old rôle.

The midwest company of "Mary," instead of opening in Chicago late this month, has been brought back to New York for strengthening, and a second company of "The Tavern" will take its place at Cohan's Grand in Chicago on the last day of this month. The Daly-Tynan rôle, in the Chicago company, will be acted by Lowell Sherman, and Joseph Allen, the hermit of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," will have the rôle of the hired man.

The Pacific Coast has not proved itself any too profitable a haven for the bedroom plays this season. Mr. Woods's "The Girl in the Limousine" wound up its affairs in Salt Lake City or environs a few weeks ago, and now the news comes that Florence Moore and "Breakfast in Bed" have also suspended in the West. It looks like a hard Winter for Avery Hopwood.

Speaking of such things, "Honey Girl" failed to impress the road to any great extent, and accordingly ceased to exist in Cincinnati a week ago. The time has passed when a New York endorsement is guarantee of a triumphal march through the provinces—the byword of the hinterland nowadays is "Is that so?"

The tabloid revue is sweeping everything before it in vaudeville, and several legitimate producers have intimated that, if properly approached, they would condense musical comedy hits for the two-a-day. The tabloid revue, however, has reached the limit of practicability in size—a limit fixed by the necessity of having about eight other acts on the same bill. A number of revues are getting $3,000 a week, and others $2,500—the former amount, it appears, being the outside limit which producers must keep in mind.

One intrepid vaudeville agent cabled Gabrielle d'Annunzio a few days ago asking if he would consider a vaudeville engagement in this country. The reply was to the effect that he would consider anything that added to his experience of life, and asked for further details.

Lionel Barrymore, as intimated in this spot recently, will act "Macbeth" at the Apollo Theatre on the night of Thursday, Feb. 17. It is Mr. Hopkins's production, with Julia Arthur as the Lady Macbeth and Robert Edmond Jones, of course, as the power behind the scenery. It is a production which promises to be something of a jolt to the old-timers, for Mr. Hopkins's advance announcements indicate that it will be produced "without regard to its temporal values," but with the idea of impressing upon the audience its immortal qualities.

February, in addition to the Barrymore "Macbeth," promises to add two new theatres to New York's considerable but seemingly insufficient line-up. These will be the Ambassador, which the Shuberts have built in Forty-ninth Street, and the Klaw, which Mr. Klaw has caused to be erected in Forty-fifth, just about opposite the Plymouth. The former house, which will be ready early in the month, will be opened with "The Rose Girl," a musical piece by William Cary Duncan; the Klaw has no prospective tenant as yet, but is not likely to find much difficulty in getting one.

Ethel Levey, who has held her position in London as one of the foremost theatrical favorites of that spot for a considerable number of years, has tourneyed all the way to New York to play an engagement of one week at the Palace. Not only will she sing as of yore, but "there will be a delightful surprise in her act that will make town talk for many moons." On the program with her will be Bert Clark in "A Wayward Conceit" and divers others.

Carnegie Institute of Technology, in Pittsburgh, the students of which have acted a number of interesting plays in the past, will presently bring forth "The Life and Death of William Shakespeare," a play which Arnold Daly expected to produce eight or nine years ago, but which he eventually abandoned because of the cost entailed. The authors are both professional writers for the stage—Hubert Osborne and Laurence Eyre, the latter the author of "Miss Nelly of N'Orleans." The Shakespeare play, which is to be acted in Pittsburgh on Feb. 3 with an amateur cast but professional direction, opens with Shakespeare's banishment from Stratford, and shows him later as a stable boy in London, then as an actor at the Globe Theatre. It follows him thence into playwriting, and in an epilogue shows him at his death still in search of the ideal.

THE NEW PLAYS

THREE more plays will be added to the list this week, one of them for matinees only, but with the prospect of nightly performances if all goes well. As for the others, there will be a spectacular melodrama in our biggest theatre and a comedy in our smallest.

JOHN HAWTHORNE—Tomorrow afternoon at the Garrick Theatre.

The continued popularity of "Heartbreak House," at the Garrick, compels the production of the next Theatre Guild play for matinees only—on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons, for the present at least. "John Hawthorne" is the work of David Liebovitz, a local youth, and, further than that, the Guild announces absolutely nothing about it.

The cast will include Robert Babcock, William Franklin, George Frenger, Franklyn Hanna, Edgar Kent, Warren Krech, Camille Pastorfield, Albert Perry, Sara Pierrin, Muriel Starr, Edgar Stehli, Lian Stephana, Jacob Weisser, Philip Wood and Bert Young.

COGNAC—Tomorrow night at the Princess Theatre.

"Cognac" is the work of one David Arnold Balch, one of the scenario chiefs of the Metro film concern. The scenes are laid in Vermont, and "the story has to do with the homecoming of an American soldier and his French bride, and the reception of the girl by a family which is not distinguished for its broad-mindedness."

Tom Powers will have the leading rôle, and the company will also include Beatrice Prentice, James Seeley, Sylvia Field, Leonard Doyle, Marie Day, Cyril Wood, Edith King, Harry Humphrey and Harry Hamalainen.

IN THE NIGHT WATCH—Wednesday night at the Century Theatre.

As the next production for the massive Century the Shuberts have selected this melodrama from the French, freely adapted by Michael Morton. "In the Night Watch" is a spectacular melodrama, with the resources of the vast Century stage drawn upon to the full to make for melodrama and scenic thrills. It begins aboard a French cruiser on the eve of the war, with a woman trapped aboard the boat when war is declared. From this come the complications.

It will be a cast of celebrities to impart these thrills to the audience. There will be Robert Warwick, back on the New York stage after a long absence; Jeanne Eagels; Madlyn Arbuckle, back after a week's absence; Cyril Scott, Margaret Dale, Edmund Lowe and Max Figman.

NEWS OF THE BERLIN STAGE

BERLIN, Dec. 26, 1920.

SALOMÉ," with real Moors, makes the fourth play by Oscar Wilde to be produced in Berlin this season. "Lady Windermere's Fan" is still playing at the Residenz Theatre, alternating with Sudermann's "Die Freundin," "Bunburry" (The Importance of Being Earnest"), puts in an occasional appearance at the Tribune, and "The Picture of Dorian Grey" was only recently taken off.

Schnitzler's "Reigen" opened at the Kleines Schauspielhaus recently in defiance of the police censorship. The lessee's contract with the theatre owners gave the theatre owners the right to forbid the performance of any play that in their opinion was "immoral" or apt to be injurious to public morality. On the afternoon of the opening the owners made use of their right to forbid the performance; the theatre directors risked a possible legal action and went ahead with their play. The matter has been smoothed over, and, curiously enough, the result has not even been increased crowds at the performances.

Not the least of the difficulties with which Berlin theatrical producers have to deal are the critics. Thus Hugo Rubsch, in the Deutsche Tageszeitung, for whom the German drama ended on Nov. 11, 1918, recently reviewed the theatrical season thus far under the heading of "Is Berlin Still a Theatrical City?"

Berlin," says the disgruntled Herr Rubsch, "has long ceased to be the theatrical centre of Germany. The provincial directors grin when Berlin is mentioned—they have their own theatrical culture, their own sensations, their own scandals. This after two years of the republic! Enchained genius, in the days that are gone, struggled with its chains, forced upon it by a wicked censorship, and clamored to be free. It is free—and not genius, but nudity, has leaped upon the stage.

"The season started with Sudermann's 'Die Freundin,' a descent into Lesbia's realm, so far as one can talk of a descent with Sudermann, who stands today where he stood twenty years ago." (Thus Mr. Sudermann is dismissed. The opinion is interesting if only for the large number of Americans, tired business men and college professors, to whom Sudermann is a figure of prominence, because he always has something snappily erotic to say or because he expresses the spirit of the times. Critical Germany—excepting always that most critical of critics, the man in the box office—is through with Sudermann, as critical America is through with Harold Bell Wright, the sale of whose novels reaches a million copies.)

"And then the Deutsche Theatre. Max Reinhardt had long been struggling in the quicksands of expressionism. The luxury tax broke his directorial heart and he left. For good. Forever."

And so on and so on Herr Kubsch can find little to feel happy about. Strindberg with three plays controls the theatrical field—he has completely forgotten Oscar Wilde. Ibsen still lives and Sudermann shows signs of life. Shakespeare is in the hands of the expressionists. Schiller is played solely by workingmen's theatres, and Shaw, worst of all, is regularly dragged forth as the greatest of living dramatists, at least in the field of comedy.

To critics, however, not so much concerned with the political convictions of the individual dramatists, the Berlin season is by far not so hopeless as it seems to Herr Kubsch. The theatrical announcements show much that Kubsch has forgotten, in the endeavor to make his point. Tonight's theatregoer, if he remembered to get his tickets two weeks ago, can choose from among the following plays, in addition to most of those already mentioned:

Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra," Hauptmann's "Bieberpelz," Wedekind's "Büchse der Pandora," Schiller's "Don Carlos" and "Wallenstein's Tod," Lessing's "Nathan der Weise," Rolland's "Danton," Anzengruber's "Pfarrer von Kirchfeld," Bahr's "Der Selige," and Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," with Alexander Moissi as Mark Antony. Musical shows include Strauss's "Der Letzte Waltzer" and Fall's "Die Spanische Nactigall," with Fritzi Massary, Glibert's "Der ersten Liebe goldne Zeit," and "Der Geiger von Lugano," and Ascher's "Baronesschen Sarah"; also "Die Scheidungsreise," "Yu-Shi Tanzt," "Wenn Liebe erwacht," "Hoheit die Tänzerin" and "Das Hollandweibchen," by Kalmar. Further, there are three plays by Oscar Wilde still on the boards, and "Die Sache mit Lola," with Max Palmenberg. The Christmas season, too, saw many Christmas pantomimes and revivals, ostensibly for the children.

THE report from Chicago early this month to the effect that P. John Berggren and George K. Spoor had practically perfected stereoscopic motion pictures has been amplified by a brief description of their camera and its pictures in the current issue of The Motion Picture News. The principle of double images photographed from slightly different angles and blended into one picture of apparently three dimensions, which is familiar to all who have used the once popular stereoscope, has been employed in the Berggren-Spoor camera, it seems. The machine is equipped with two lenses, placed side by side, and when the pictures it makes are shown on the screen they are projected through similar lenses so as to form one image, which, it is said, has the illusion of depth. Mr. Berggren, who is a native of Sweden, invented the camera, according to the report, and Mr. Spoor financed his work, which has extended over four years. According to the latter, any ordinary motion picture camera or projection machine can be used for stereoscopic pictures by the addition of a small attachment, which will be placed upon the market at an early date.

The Motion Picture Committee's campaign for the relief of suffering European children comes to its climax this week, with Wednesday marked as Moving Picture Day throughout the country. On that day speakers and screen announcements will appeal to from 12,000,000 to 24,000,000 persons gathered in theatres and it is hoped that more than $3,500,000 will be raised. On Saturday of this week there will be special performances at many theatres, and the receipts from sales of tickets will be turned into the Hoover fund. One of the features of Wednesday's activities will be a midnight show at the Capitol Theatre at which Herbert Hoover will speak. S. L. Rothapfel, Chairman of the Motion Picture Committee, will provide the entertainment, which will be for campaign workers and those who have arranged to send 200 or more children to a special performance at the Capitol on Saturday morning, which will be equivalent to a contribution of $100 to the relief fund.

The first completed print of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" as it has been put into film form was brought to New York last week by Rex Ingram, the director, and June Mathis, who prepared the scenario. The Metro executives, it is reported, were greatly pleased with the picture, and are now negotiating for a Broadway theatre, where they hope it will have a long run. They expect to present it to the public about Feb. 20.

Vicente Blasco Ibañes, who worked with Miss Mathis on the scenario before his return to Spain, has written to R. A. Rowland, the President of the Metro Pictures Corporation, expressing enthusiastic approval of the set of still photographs of the photoplay sent him by the company.

The first National Conference of Motion Picture and Musical Interests, fostered by the Motion Picture News, will open at the Hotel Astor tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock and continue through Thursday afternoon. Charles D. Isaacson, music editor of The News, will be the Chairman, and among the speakers who will participate in the conference are S. L. Rothapfel, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, Edward L. Hyman, Otto H. Kahn and Paul Eisler.

A device consisting principally of a ground glass screen and mirrors arranged to reflect motion pictures so that they may be shown in daylight was demonstrated recently at the projection room of the Cinema-Quipment Center, Inc., at 729 Seventh Avenue. The inventor is Dr. Alfredo de Castro Silveria, who pointed out that, with his substitute for the usual screen, pictures might be shown in school rooms, shops, hospital wards, playgrounds and other places where it was not convenient or possible to obtain darkness when desired.

The second bulletin of "Exceptional Photoplays" issued by the Committee on Critique of the National Board of Review includes Maurice Tourneur's "The Last of the Mohicans," Douglas Fairbanks's "The Mark of Zorro" and D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East."

The latest bulletins of the National Motion Picture League recommend for young people and adults, with certain cuts specified, "Nineteen and Phyllis," with Charles Ray; "The Rookie's Return," with Douglas MacLean; "The One Best Pet," a Chester animal comedy; "The Honorable Cad," one of the series produced by the Stage Women's War Relief; "Bunty Pulls the Strings," directed by Reginald Baresen, and "The Highest Law," directed by Ralph Ince.

BROUGHT INTO FOCUS

CINEMATOGRAPHY has a prodigious capacity for ideas. One of its most important attributes is its ability to accommodate almost any one who wants to say something in its language. The fact that the "photoplay" and "comedy" are only branches of the cinematographic tree is beginning to dawn upon the public at large, including inveterate movie fans, and even some exhibitors. They are beginning to realize that something besides word-and-picture plots can be entertaining on the screen.

Travelers, for example, long ago discovered that an increasable number of people could be interested in the pictorial records of their journeys, and cartoonists have come to regard motion pictures as their natural province. Numerous scientific subjects have been treated popularly on the screen for the amusement of ordinary people, and the world's news is told in moving pictures as well as in printed columns. Photographic artists, too, have learned how to put upon the screen all of the beauty they have ever been able to capture or create.

The screen lends itself freely to the cinematician, the workman who knows how to use it. The unimaginative clod who employs the camera merely to take pictures of objects as they normally present themselves to his literal mind obtains in his film only a dull reflection of mute reality, but the keen specialist, who has a live vocational or avocational interest in any subject, and with it a grasp on the technique of cinematography, finds that he can entertain a general and uninformed public which he could reach through no other medium. Cinematicians have made the circulation of the blood and the ways of the planets interesting for people who go to the theatre, not to study physiology or astronomy, but to be entertained.

And now the general subject of sports is receiving authentic and skillful treatment on the screen in a way to make many people actually seek outdoor amusement, or at least feel like seeking it, which is not the same thing, but something. Grantland Rice and Jack Eaton are co-operating to produce a series of Sport Pictorials, the first of which, "How'll You Have Your Bath?" was shown at the Capitol last October, and the latest of which, "Making Man-Handlers," came to the same theatre last week. About eight or nine reels, each dealing with a different form of sport, have been completed, and, presumably, will find their way to Broadway in the course of time. Among them is a light-hearted lecture on golf that will be good comedy to those who know little about the game, and poignant tragedy, perhaps, to those earnest devotees who, like the hero of the picture, are just duffers. Even a man who doesn't love dogs or horses will not very successfully resist the Sport Pictorials about them, and it will not take a baseball fan to thrill at the sight of a regular kids' game on a corner lot dissolving into a big league clash at the Polo Grounds.

Just pictures of dogs or horses or golfers or ball players would be just pictures, mildly interesting to those already interested in the subjects, but having no lure for others. Treated cinematographically, however, with adroit use of the close-up, the long-shot, the dissolve and other artifices of the camera, with a wide variety of pictures assembled by some one whose idea of continuity includes an appreciation of dramatic values, spiced with humor in scenes and subtitles without the sacrifice of information, sports, all sports, any sport, can be made entertaining to all those whose cerebral molecules, atoms and electrons are not inert. And so they have been treated in the six Sport Pictorials which the writer has seen. Mr. Rice and Mr. Eaton have begun something that should be profitable to the amusement-seeking public, and they have begun it well. They are putting the motion picture to one of the uses to which it is particularly adaptable, and their patience and skill have already produced definitely good results and given promise of even better things in the future. There is a place for the Sport Pictorials on the motion picture screen.

THE Lexington Theatre has been all Irish for the last two weeks, and will continue so for another week at least, its program being made up of music and motion pictures, with an Irish film entitled "In the Days of St. Patrick" topping the bill. The spirit of the entertainment is also strongly religious. So the long and short of it is, the pictures at the Lexington have a purpose apart from that of pure entertainment. They are Irish for the Irish, and propaganda for every one else.

And as such they have no interest for a motion picture reviewer, but as motion pictures, considered simply as works in cinematography, they have a real interest, and the fact that they are, in the main, exceptionally well made is what this is written to report. "In the Days of St. Patrick" was produced in Ireland under the direction of Norman Whitten in association with the Rev. W. MacSweeney of Maynooth University, near Dublin, and through the courtesy of the Royal Irish Historical Society. On the authority of all this, the writer accepts its setting, costuming and general arrangement as authentic, so far as modern knowledge can make it, and, from his own experience, he can testify that the moving pictures are the work of some one who knows how to direct players and use a camera.

Some of the scenes are strikingly beautiful and others are dramatically effective. The actors, all amateurs, are occasionally stiff and formal, but most of the time they seem easy in their roles, and much of their earnestness has become part of the substance of the story they tell. Of course this story, being a religious narrative, is not always exciting, and, judged from a secular point of view, there are even dull stretches in it, but St. Patrick is an interesting figure to the layman as well as the churchman, and his life as told in the picture at the Lexington is more entertaining than many of the photoplays that come to Broadway. Propaganda is not objectionable when it comes in honest guise, and entertains as well as advocates. It seems to the writer that "In the Days of St. Patrick" should prove interesting to any intelligent person, no matter what he might think of the Irish rebellion and its connection with religion—but, of course, not every one could appreciate it under present conditions, in the charged atmosphere of the Lexington Theatre.

MUSIC REHEARSALS AND THE UNION

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

ON Dec. 12 THE TIMES printed in this column some reflections on what was considered the unwise and inartistic action of the Musical Mutual Protective Union in this city, controlling the local orchestral players, in decreeing that the symphony orchestras of New York, now three in number, should not be allowed more than four rehearsals a week, and that these rehearsals should not exceed two hours each in duration. (This decree was not to apply to the New York Symphony Orchestra this season, on account of an existing contract by which the former conditions were to be continued till the season's close.)

As will be remembered, this new decree shortens the length of rehearsals from two and a half hours to two, and reduces the weekly number from five to four. The actual time for rehearsal per week is thus reduced from twelve and a half hours to eight.

It was obviously meant in the article discussing this subject that the limitations on the number and length of rehearsals were included among the conditions under which the members of the union are allowed to engage themselves to play for a weekly salary—a salary which, though it was not stated in the article in question, was increased as much as 25 per cent. this season, on the demand of the union.

After five weeks' deliberation, the President of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, sends the following letter to THE TIMES, received on Jan. 15:

New York, Jan. 14, 1921.

To the Editor of The Times:

New York City:

Dear Sir:—In justice to the Musical Mutual Protective Union, pledged to the State of New York in the service of musical art, I respectfully ask for space to correct a false impression created by writings of your music editor, Mr. Aldrich.

It has been published in THE TIMES that the Musical Union does not permit its members to rehearse beyond a certain length of time in the preparation of concert programs. This is not correct. The Musical Union simply limits the time given for rehearsals which is included in the weekly scale, to the members of such organization, to two hours; but said orchestras can avail themselves of as mush time as they want, but must pay after the two hours, as overtime, which is charged at the rate of 75 cents for each quarter hour.

The practice of exploiting a conductor at the expense of his men is as old as musical criticism. This organization, which is nearing its mark of 9,000 members, can man ten symphony orchestras which will be a credit to any conductor, as well as supply conductors. It is therefore that a great injustice is being done by voicing such criticism or by creating such an impression in the press, which seeks to discredit the Musical Mutual Protective Union.

In fairness to the public, please let it be known that the union does not limit the time which may be paid for at any rehearsal. Yours truly,

SAMUEL FINKELSTEIN,
President, M. M. P. U.

It can hardly be that the false impression complained of was really created by the article in question. In that article it was, of course, assumed that the number and duration of the rehearsals described were those prescribed by the conditions, and for the weekly pay, under which the union permits its members to engage themselves. It did not seem necessary to explain in so many words that the players might be hired for longer rehearsals at an additional payment, fixed by the union. No known union prohibits its members from working overtime for additional pay at rates fixed by the union, and the idea brought forward by Mr. Finkelstein of a union that limits the time for which its members may be paid, and knows no such thing as "overtime," is indeed a novelty.

We do not know whether the Musical Mutual Protective Union hopes to increase its members' incomes by securing additional pay from the orchestral employers when the conductors find, as they must inevitably find, that the rehearsal time prescribed by the union is not enough to gain artistic results, and that it hence must unavoidably lead to the destruction of the highest artistic standards, or the lowering of them. It seems as if the hope of overtime pay must have been the motive for the adoption of the new rule rather than the purpose of gaining for its members more time, more leisure for rest, enjoyment, study and the living of life in general.

But it must be evident that the increased cost of orchestral concerts thereby imposed is probably too much to be met. It is "more than the traffic will bear." Mr. Finkelstein says in his letter that orchestral conductors can keep their men at rehearsal beyond the two-hour limit by paying them "overtime" at the rate of 75 cents for each quarter hour. For an orchestra of ninety men this will make the two-and-a-half-hour rehearsal—heretofore universally regarded as necessary and tacitly admitted to be so by the union in regarding it as the standard rehearsal period—cost $135 additional and the four rehearsals per week that the union now permits $540 beyond the regular weekly salary list. For a season of twenty-five weeks this would amount to $13,500. Mr. Finkelstein does not give in his letter the views of the union touching a fifth rehearsal in the week, or what the rate charged for it would be.

It is, however, a purely academic question. As a matter of fact, the fifth rehearsal, at such cost as it would come to, would be an impossibility. So, it may be feared, would be the two-hours-and-a-half rehearsal at the price fixed by the union. When orchestral deficits are running from $100,000 to $300,000 a year, it scarcely needs much figuring to show that the cost of the needed rehearsals cannot be assured by even the most benevolent and the most liberal backers, even though they know the rehearsals to be indispensable to the attainment of the best results. In THE TIMES article of Dec. 12 Mr. Flagler, the backer of the New York Symphony Orchestra and one of the most enlightened of his kind, was quoted as believing that the main, if not the only, reason for contributing the large subsidies that are now indispensable for the existence of orchestras, over and above the sums contributed by the public at the box office, is to insure sufficient rehearsal and hence the finest attainable performances. Sufficient rehearsal is, therefore, the very essence of a subsidized orchestra's reason for existence.

It thus appears that no false impression could have been conveyed by THE TIMES article on the union's attitude toward rehearsals; nor was injustice meant to be done to the union; nor is it to be believed that the union was "discredited," as Mr. Finkelstein in his letter seems to think. Of course, it is perfectly well known to all who have looked into the matter that the Musical Mutual Protective Union has at heart high artistic standards, such as should raise the best symphony orchestras recruited from it to the highest pitch of excellence—though we must say that Mr. Finkelstein seems a little overoptimistic when he maintains that ten such orchestras could be recruited from the union's members and that they would all be a credit to any conductor. The third that was recruited from it last season was in quality such that a good many substitutes for original members had to be obtained by angling for them all over the country. We should hardly like to guarantee, say, the last seven symphony orchestras recruited as Mr. Finkelstein suggests.

But this is neither here nor there. The question is not of the excellence of the players, but of the possibility of obtaining the rehearsals that are absolutely necessary, no matter how fine or how skillful the players are. The fact is that the union has, unwisely as many will think, and perhaps without a full appreciation of what the ultimate result will be, practically reduced the number of rehearsal hours at the disposition of any orchestral conductor in New York from twelve and a half hours a week to eight. What is the use of saying that at least ten hours—four rehearsals of two and a half hours each—can be had by paying extra for them at a high rate when there is not the money to pay for them? The public here and in other orchestrally provided cities has long been getting orchestral concerts that cost far more than it pays for them at the box office. Benevolently disposed millionaires and others less than millionaires have enabled this to be done. But it is obvious that there is such a thing as killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

The danger stands stark before us that the high standards of orchestral performance of American orchestras will be definitely lowered by such action as the union has taken. It will not, of course, be intentional on the part of the union, which is well known to be made up of artists and to cherish artistic ideals as the apple of its eye. But it will be none the less inevitable. The union is bound to keep up the high artistic standard it has always maintained. It is also bound to obtain for its members the highest salaries and the most equitable conditions possible. As was said in this column last month, it is not only the right but the duty of every worker for wages or salary to get as much as he can. But also a look into the future is necessary, to be sure that power is not exercised unwisely. It is necessary that the public should be educated not downward but upward; that it should not be induced to be satisfied with inferior performances insufficiently studied and rehearsed; that it should not be allowed to consider "chic" and "faking" and "magnetism" on the part of a conductor and cleverness and dexterity on the part of the players a sufficient substitute for the serious and painstaking study, rehearsing and polishing that alone are able to produce a fine orchestral performance.

The subscribers of the Beethoven Association were informed at a recent concert, by means of a printed slip in the program, that arrangements have now finally been completed for the publication by the association of H. E. Krehbiel's edition of Thayer's "Life of Beethoven." The process of what the publishers call "manufacture" has at last been begun. A limited number of copies will be available to subscribers of the Beethoven Association at a price less than that charged to the general public. The book, as previously announced, will appear in three volumes. It is expected that their publication and delivery to subscribers will be completed in the year 1921. It was hoped that the book would be partly, if not wholly, published by this time, but unexpected delays and difficulties supervened. The publisher of the book will not be as first announced, but will be G. Schirmer of New York.

A GUEST CONDUCTOR.

Frederick Stock, who on Tuesday will conduct the Chicago Symphony Orchestra's first concert in New York, came to America in 1895 to become a member of the Western orchestra, and in 1899 was made assistant conductor under Theodore Thomas. Upon the death of Mr. Thomas in 1905 Stock succeeded him as director, a post he has since held. He graduated as a violinist from the Cologne Conservatory, later studying composition with Humperdinck, Zoellner, Jensen and Wuellner. Chicago's fine symphony organization, under the leadership of Mr. Stock, it is said, has cultivated a large following in a score of mid-Western cities. This season it is widening an already considerable circle of activities by an Eastern trip, including concerts this week in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington as well as in New York.

MARY GARDEN PRESENTS—

Continued

MARY GARDEN presents her fellow-artists to New York tomorrow, when the Chicago Opera Association, of which she has just been elected director, opens its fourth annual visit in the East. Miss Garden is the first woman manager of opera in America in her time. Mrs. Jeanette M. Thurber, founder of the National Conservatory, was actively associated with the American Opera Company, which sang at the old Academy in 1886 with Theodore Thomas as "artistic director," and reappeared as the National Opera Company the following year at the Brooklyn Academy and the Metropolitan.

Even Europe is not without a like example. Mme. Emma Corelli is today, as for twelve years past, director of the Costanzi Theatre, the chief opera house of Rome. She was a former Italian dramatic soprano, a famous Gioconda and wife of the impresario Walter Mocchi, who took touring companies to South America. Mme. Corelli's voice failed her at Parma, it is said, in the first act of "Gioconda," when an Italian audience whistled her off the stage. She retired as an artist and subsequently took up her husband's profession as a director. It appears, therefore, that Miss Garden is the first woman to combine the rôles of singing actress and impresario.

Within forty-six hours after the fall of the final curtain upon the season of the Chicago Auditorium the curtain at the Manhattan Opera House will rise upon the opening of a six weeks' engagement of the Western stars in this city. The company boards four special trains in Chicago this afternoon and will travel over various lines to New York in time for the performance of "Norma" tomorrow evening. Miss Garden, who will accompany the other stars, was to sing in Chicago yesterday in "L'Amore dei tre Re."

Thirty-eight carloads of scenery, costumes and mechanical equipment have arrived for use in the New York engagement, and twelve more will accompany the Chicago specials. The Manhattan Opera House has been renovated and Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein has done everything possible, it is declared, "to provide a setting in keeping with the sentiment of the occasion," the first visit of the Chicago organization to the former home of many among its personnel, and of Miss Garden to the stage where she achieved her first American triumphs under the direction of the late Oscar Hammerstein.

With some changes in the order of opera for the first week, Bellini's "Norma" remains the bill for the opening tomorrow. Gina Marinuzzi will conduct and Rosa Raisa will return in the title rôle, with Gabriella Besanzoni as Adalgisa, Forrest Lamont as Pollione, and Virgilio Lazzari as Oroveso.

Mary Garden and Muratore will sing "Monna Vanna" on Tuesday, with Georges Baklanoff, Albert Paillard, Desire Defrere, Constantin Nicolay and Henri Morin, a new French conductor.

Marinuzzi's new opera, "Jacquerie," originally was scheduled for the first week. In its place "Tosca" has been substituted on Wednesday night, with Yvonne Gall, Joseph Hislop, the new Scotch tenor, and Baklanoff, while Marinuzzi will conduct.

"The Jewels of the Madonna" will be sung on Thursday evening by Raisa, Margery Maxwell, Carmen Pascova, Philene Falco, Forrest Lamont and Giacomo Rimini, led by Pietro Cimini, a new Italian director.

"Carmen," with Garden and Muratore, will be heard on Friday evening instead of at the Saturday matinee. Baklanoff will be the Escamillo and Marinuzzi will again conduct.

Leroux's "Le Chemineau," a work of modern French art later than "Pelléas" and "Louise," will be the Saturday matinee, with its characters of Richepin's poetic story taken by Mesdames Gall, Maxwell and Claessens, Messrs. Dufranne, Baklanoff, Paillard, Defrere, Cotreuil and Nicolay.

"Rigoletto" on Saturday night completes the first week, with Florence Macbeth, Tito Schipa and Titta Ruffo, Mr. Marinuzzi conducting for the fourth time in six days.

Galli-Curci makes her first appearance of the season in "Lucia" on Monday of the following week, which will be the first time the prima donna has sung in opera since her recent marriage, while Schipa will be Donizetti's hero in the vocal version of Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor."

"L'Apache," a ballet prepared for Chicago but never done there, is among the later expected productions at the Manhattan. The dancers, again headed by Pavley and Oukreinsky, are to take part this week in "The Jewels" and "Carmen."

ORCHESTRA PROGRAMS.

LEO SOWERBY, whose overture, "Comes Autumn Time," was produced by Walter Damrosch in 1918, when the composer was serving with the 332d Field Artillery, has written a pianoforte concerto that will be performed by E. Robert Schmitz and the Symphony Society this afternoon in Aeolian Hall.

This young American was born in Grand Rapids and studied in Chicago. He is now 26 years old, and has composed also "Three British Folk-Tune Settings," a chamber music trio, string quartet and woodwind quintet. Today's program opens with Chausson's symphony in B flat and closes with two excerpts from Wagner's "Valkyrie."

Josef Lhevinne will assist at the Philharmonic matinee in Carnegie Hall today, playing the first pianoforte concerto of Liszt. Conductor Stransky repeats Schumann's First Symphony and adds Smetana's "Vltava" and Ippolitov-Ivanov's "Caucasian Sketches."

Ignaz Friedman appears with the National Symphony on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Mengelberg's duplicate program comprises Ravel's "Rhapsodie Espagnole," Liszt's pianoforte concerto in E flat and the Fifth Symphony of Tschaikovsky.

Frederick Stock and the Chicago Orchestra will introduce themselves to New York on Tuesday evening at Carnegie Hall, presenting Brahms's Third Symphony, Tschaikovsky's "Francesca," Wagner's prelude and finale from "Tristan" and Arnold Bax's new tone poem, "The Garden of Fand."

Toscanini's third Metropolitan program on Tuesday night, when his orchestra gives its fifth concert in Manhattan and its seventh in or near New York, will include Mozart's E flat symphony, Wagner's "Master Singers" prelude, Elgar's "Variations" and Sinigaglia's "Piedmont" suite.

Artur Bodanzky will conduct two orchestral overtures — Weber's "Oberon" and Beethoven's "Egmont"—at a concert début of Erika Morini in Carnegie Hall on Wednesday afternoon, the solo numbers being violin concertos of Paganini and Mendelssohn.

Fritz Kreisler will play the Symphony Society's "historical cycle" on Thursday afternoon and Friday night at Carnegie Hall. Mr. Damrosch's "one-composer" program is the Second Symphony, "Tragic" overture and violin concerto of Brahms.

Rachmaninoff assists the Philharmonic on Thursday night and Friday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, the evening program comprising Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, Brahms's "Tragic" overture, Wagner's prelude to "The Master Singers" and the Russian pianist as soloist in his concerto in D minor.

Mr. Stransky's program for the Friday matinee Philharmonic is all-Russian and will present Borodin's symphony in B minor, Tchaikovsky's "Overture 1812" and a repetition by Rachmaninoff of his concerto, which is the third of his numbered works in this form for piano and orchestra.

Walter Damrosch at the fourth of the Symphony Concerts for Young People in Carnegie Hall on Saturday will present Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture and Mozart's concerto in E flat for two pianos, with Guy Maier and Lee Pattison.

David Mannes in the fourth of eight free orchestra concerts at the Metropolitan Art Museum next Saturday will direct two movements from Schumann's "Spring" symphony, two from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," and others of Bach, Saint-Saëns, Smetana, Tchaikovsky, Boccherini, Chabrier and Wagner.

METROPOLITAN OPERA.

LUCREZIA BORI, after an absence of five years, will return to the Metropolitan Opera Company late this week, the eleventh of the season, which will also be the first of "double opera" at rival theatres.

Eight operas will be sung at the Metropolitan, the extraordinary number including "Samson and Delilah" tonight in concert form, with Jeanne Gordon, Sembach, Amato, Rothier and others, led by Albert Wolff.

Charpentier's "Louise" is repeated tomorrow, with Farrar, Harrold, Whitehill and three dozen more, heard recently in the first performance of this modern French work by Mr. Gatti-Casazza's company.

Boito's "Mefistofele" will have a fifth hearing on Wednesday, with Alda, Easton, Gigli and Mardones.

"Aida," at Thursday's popular matinee, is also a fifth time, with Muzio, Matzenauer, Kingston, Danise and Rothier.

"Madame Butterfly" is repeated Thursday evening, with a recent cast, including Farrar, Crimi and Scotti.

"La Bohème," with Bori, will be Friday's gala "welcome home" to the Spanish star, assisted by Gigli, Scotti, Martino, Picco and Roselle.

Verdi's "Don Carlos" has its fourth performance and last but one in the subscription on Saturday afternoon, with Ponselle, Matzenauer, Martinelli, De Luca and Didur.

"Tristan" in English, with Matzenauer, Sembach, Whitehill, Blass and Miss Telva new as Brangaene, will be sung at popular prices on Saturday evening. It is a bargain, indeed, for, barring an extra matinee, Wagner's work will be heard but once more in the regular subscription.

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Malipiero's recent Berkshire prize work, "Rispetti e Strombotti," opens the Letz Quartet's second program on Tuesday night in Aeolian Hall. Mischa Levitzki will assist in the piano quartet in A, Op. 26, of Brahms, and there is also an unfinished quartet in C minor, in one movement, by Schubert.

Beethoven's thirty-two pianoforte sonatas will be played by Olga Samaroff on eight Tuesday afternoons, beginning this week, at Aeolian Hall. Leopold Stokowski will add informal talks at the first, fourth and seventh matinees, on Beethoven's early, middle and last periods as composer.

Kathleen Parlow, returning to America after some years, will have Howard Brockway's help on Friday in the violin sonata of Pizetti. She introduced this work in London, where it made a profound impression; it has been once played in New York by Alexander Bloch.

ARTISTS IN RECITAL.

Mme. Tetrazzini, appearing with her concert company at the Hippodrome tonight, is announced to sing Thomas's polonaise from "Mignon," an air from Bellini's "Sonnambula" and the "Shadow Song" from Meyerbeer's "Dinorah."

Eleanor Reynolds, who gives her first Aeolian recital on Tuesday afternoon, is an American contralto who has spent seven years abroad, appearing most recently in the Vienna Mahler festival.

Juan Reyes, a Chilean pianist, makes his début on Thursday afternoon at Aeolian Hall.

Kentucky Nominates Gest.

The Louisville Times has nominated Morris Gest as the next impresario of operatic enterprise in America, declaring that what opera lacks always is "a visioned producer," and that even the money required is more easy to procure. "When Mr. Gest brought the first Russian ballet to the United States," says the newspaper, "he proved that he had been influenced by his temperament and his experience under Oscar Hammerstein to love beauty beyond the box office." The producer of "The Wanderer," "Chu-Chin Chow" and "Mecca," having conquered all the worlds which can be seen by the telescopes of the theatre, the Kentucky writer ventures to suggest to certain quarters that shall be nameless "that they fill the lack of Campanini and Hammerstein by inducing him to produce American opera upon a scale which shall surpass Europe as well."

RUSSIAN ISBA RETURNS.

The Russian Isba will give a week of eight programs of its folk songs and dances at the Lexington Theatre, from Jan. 31 to Feb. 5, as the first "benefit performance" under the Commonwealth Centre's nationalization campaign. An Advisory Committee, headed by George Arliss, Wynne Matheson and others, has recommended such representations of the native art of various European groups forming a part of New York's people. Miss Virginia Potter, Mrs. Adrian Iselin, Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim and Miss Isabel Hapgood are among the patrons, and 25 per cent. of the Isba's receipts will go to aid Russian refugee children.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

Samuel Baldwin will give the usual free organ recital in the Great Hall of the City College this afternoon.

Yvette Guilbert and a chorus of students will give a French program tonight in the Music League's series at Cooper Union.

John Doane's choir at the Church of the Incarnation this afternoon will sing the first part of Franck's "The Beatitudes."

Clarence Dickinson presents a Saint-Saëns program on Friday at the Brick Church, assisted by Mildred Dilling and Nevada Van der Veer.

OTHERS TO BE HEARD.

Ben Atwell of the Chicago Opera will address the Motion Picture Musical Conference this week on the use of operatic works in film theatres.

Ethel Grow, contralto, will give a recital for the Washington Heights Musical Club on Thursday evening at the Plaza.

The University Glee Club, under Arthur D. Woodruff, will hold its fifty-third concert on Thursday night at the Astor.

Chalif's dancers are to appear on Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall.

GIVE SUNDAY PROGRAMS.

Helen Stover, Beryl Rubinstein and others will appear at the Hippodrome this afternoon for the United Odd Fellows' Orphan Asylum.

Cecil Arden, Martha Atwood and Josef Schlisky sing at the Jewish Forum's anniversary tonight at the Republic Theatre with the Brooklyn Hebrew Orphan Asylum Band.

Henry Gideon, Lazar Saminsky and others give an evening of ritual and folk music at the Hotel Pennsylvania tonight for The Judeans.

Sets Type to Sing.

Alfonso Romero, a Mexican tenor due at the Times Square Theatre next Sunday, and appearing today in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall, was born at Guadalajara, worked as a law clerk for his uncle in Mexico City, and got his start as a singer there and in San Francisco. He toured Australia, India and South Africa. Coming to New York he paid for further studies, it is said, "by his work as a printer's devil," and today is a good printer of English, French, Spanish and Italian, as well as a singer of these tongues.

Plays by Touch System.

Everhard Beverwijk, a blind pianist from Holland, appears this afternoon at the Hotel Astor, playing a Bach-Tausig toccata and fugue, Mendelssohn's "Serious Variations," pieces by Chopin, Debussy and Liszt, and a "Romance" and "Sylphs' Dance" of his own. He studied music by the Braille touch system, and has played in Dutch colonies and South America.

Two Louise Homers Sing.

Mme. Louise Homer and her daughter, Louise, will appear for the first time in the Newark Armory tomorrow night, singing the duet, "Quis Est Homo," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," another from Delibes's "Lakmé," Sidney Homer's "Mother Goose," Kjerulf's "Last Night the Nightingale Woke Me," and Marziale's "Go, Pretty Rose."

Brooklyn Music.

William Neidlinger will give a free organ recital at the Girls' High School, Halsey and Macon Streets and Nostrand Avenue, Brooklyn, this afternoon.

Adelaide Fischer, soprano, and Mario Laurenti, baritone, give a joint recital tomorrow evening at the Brooklyn Academy.

HARDEN ON MOTION PICTURES

MAXIMILIAN HARDEN, editor of Die Zukunft, has been turning his attention to the screen, and has a number of definite ideas as to the present and future of motion pictures, among which is the conviction that producers will sooner or later fail in their efforts to do a big business with big pictures, "to conquer the masses by mass effects." No one should "expect permanent effect from astonishment," he says.

The editor of Die Zukunft expressed these and other opinions in a letter to the editor of the Berlin Film-Kurier, after he had seen a motion picture called "Der Golem."

The story of "Der Golem," of which Paul Wegener is author, director and principal player, is based on an old Jewish legend, resembling somewhat that of Dr. Frankenstein. A huge figure of clay, made by the learned Rabbi Loew, is furnished with the breath of life, but not with the power of speech, by the insertion into his breast of a tube containing a scroll bearing a magic word. When the scroll is removed the Golem, as the giant is called, is lifeless.

Brought to life by Rabbi Loew, the Golem uses his great strength to save the Ghetto of the Imperial city from destruction ordered by the Emperor, but later, after he has been employed in a personal undertaking by a young rabbi, who loves Rabbi Loew's daughter, the sweetheart of a Christian youth, the giant wreaks havoc in the Ghetto until a Christian child, whom he picks up, makes him harmless by playfully removing the scroll from his breast.

Maximilian Harden's letter to the editor of Film-Kurier follows:

"Your eyes did not deceive you. I witnessed the first performance of the 'Golem'; out of interest in the development of the film industry and, especially, in the artistically earnest efforts of Mr. Wegener, which are supported by sound sense and well-trained imagination.

"The material of this legend, with its milieu changing between the Ghetto and the Imperial palace, is an uncommonly happy find which, indeed, loses a little because the lump of earth endowed with life by the rabbi does not, in the movies, differentiate itself from the people around it through its lack of the power of speech, which is one of the principal characteristics of human existence.

"To have had the figure acquire the other human characteristics that distinguish the human from the animal world, laughter and tears, and then let it lose them again, would have been more fruitful poetically than the love story, the historic-religious impossibility of which the author himself certainly does not fail to recognize and which he, perhaps, regards as a necessary concession to a taste educated to sweet stuff.

"Are such concessions unavoidable? I think this question is more important than the always subjective judgment of an individual film. This film I believe to be one of the best of its kind, and in the scene which unites in the festal hall of the palace the worlds of the Jews and of the Catholic court in a wisely adjusted reverence before the phantoms of their ancestors, it reaches just as high a point as it does in the technical mastery of what is no simple task.

"But just from this very summit I believe I can perceive the dawn of the gradually and slowly approaching end of the period of film art working with such enormous masses of people and constructions, involving the expenditure of millions. If the public had not already been too much accustomed to these expenditures there would have been still louder cries of joy at the wealth of pictures offered here. The fact that the more intimate things from nature and the realm of mankind—the flying away of doves from the towers, the love wandering of a cat over the roofs, the flareup of a child's temper—are having more effect, is to me a symptom of an approaching change in taste. The film industry ought to be on its guard. The risk of films costing from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000 marks can quickly become dangerous. Not for all eternity will one be able to conquer the masses by mass effects. What seemed a miracle yesterday is an everyday occurrence tomorrow.

"The scope of the films is still unlimited. We are just at the beginning. The tiresome effort to compete with the theatre, to bungle along after the drama, is bound to remain unfruitful artistically, just as every attempt to replace organic life by mechanical art. That it has brought in lots of money is due merely to the novelty of its technical means. Nowhere, however, should one expect permanent effect from astonishment. And the great political and popular pieces now in style will not 'draw' much longer. Simple, strong stuff, with lively treatment both inwardly and outwardly, with no taking for granted of historical or literary knowledge, fantastic creations whose flowers send out fragrance to the most learned and to the most simple—there, in my opinion, lies the way. The further we follow this road the faster will disappear the 'explanations,' letters and scraps of text, which today disgust the finer taste with the films.

"This can, and must, become the pictorial Bible which will help join human beings of different classes, races and tongues in a unity of feeling, as the never-dying mysteries, religious tragedies and national plays of ancient times welded together the members of a nation. The most talented poet and thinker is none 'too good' to help in this work. The film will attain its greatest height where it is not left to the mercies of the lust for royalties of the literary business people and where it is remembered that every variety of art can only prosper by being restricted to the possibilities that are open to it and to no other.

"Today I, too, must limit myself to this answer to your question, and I cannot indicate to you in more detail where the signs of the future seem to me to direct the course of the film."

DECLINE IN USE OF CASH

Steady Growth of Bank Check Habit—How Clerks Watch "Stop Payment" Orders

CHECKS are the modern substitute for money. Currency is good enough for the small affairs of life, for the incidentals of the day. Larger matters tend more and more to be handled only by the aid of these symbols of wealth. The substance is almost never seen. This represents a revolution in business, another American revolution, for the United States is the country where par excellence the checking system prevails. The changes that have been involved in this revolution are far-reaching. Gold is almost never visible. Its chief present use, apparently, is as gifts for children and servants. Certainly nobody east of the Rocky Mountains ever carries it as money.

To wear gold in a purse is as obsolete as mutton-chop side whiskers. It is not done any longer. Bank notes are almost as bad. They are so dirty now that few want to handle them. What with the scarcity of paper and the issuance of Liberty Bonds, the banknote presses have apparently ceased working. The result is that the old, frayed, germ-harboring tokens of wealth are no longer popular. Checks, new and clean, are the substitute. Consequently, checks are in vogue as never before. During an average day one of the major Wall Street banks will handle a hundred million dollars, and more, in this personal variety of currency.

Checks represent money. The checking system makes it convenient to transact business with a relatively small sum of actual coin and currency. Comparatively speaking, there is very little money in the country, and in the world, for that matter. In 1918 the total amount of gold and silver and smaller coin in the United States Treasury was only approximately $300,000,000. That is an insignificant sum when contrasted with the total volume of business or the total wealth of the country. More than one private fortune is estimated to be larger. If the owner of the largest fortune were to attempt to convert his wealth into gold dollars, provided the Government did not intervene, he might easily absorb all the gold coin in the country.

The checking system is the device which renders possible the enormous volume of business done without the sight of money. The figures of the New York Clearing House show how small a rôle real money now plays. Last year more than two hundred and fifty billion dollars in checks were passed through the Clearing House. This is only a fraction of the total amount of the checks used in the country. There are 154 other clearing houses in the country. Even these do not take the full measure of the use of checks. For checks which are cashed directly in the banks at which they are payable are naturally not included in clearing house figures. In New York alone during a year the volume of checks reaches a figure which is perhaps a thousand times as large as the entire sum of gold in the country.

This is a growth of years. It is peculiarly an American phenomenon. In the United States a very large proportion of the population keeps bank accounts and a much larger number uses checks. In many European countries, on the other hand, the keeping of a bank account is the privilege of the well to do. Every one who has had relations with European banks knows the long formality of getting a check cashed. It is as elaborate at times as being presented to royalty. It matters little that the customer may be in the bank which is the custodian of his own funds. He must pass through the identification ritual. That is not to be taken lightly. In the United States more rapid methods have been developed. Much of this has come during the last twenty-five years. Bank clearances show the trend. The change between 1865 and 1895 was not very great, but the growth since the free-silver campaign has been a veritable revolution. In 1865, for example, twenty-six billion dollars' worth of checks passed through the New York Clearing House. In 1895 the total was only twenty-eight billions. Higher figures had been attained in the early eighties, but, on the whole, the growth has been steady. After 1897, however, business boomed, and with the new prosperity came the era of checking. With an assured progress, despite ups and downs which measured the prosperity or the depression of passing years, clearances reached higher figures. In 1906 a record was made. This was almost equaled in 1910, when once more the hundred-billion-dollar mark was topped by the New York banks. Then came a slump which lasted through 1915. The next year witnessed the greatest growth, and every year since has marked an advance not less astounding.

What this signifies is perhaps not entirely clear. The sum of business has been vastly enlarged. The value of money has fallen. New prices levels have been established. A new medium of exchange has been more firmly entrenched.

The new system has brought many minor problems in its train. When money was first used the great difficulty was to prevent the debasing and the clipping of the metal. When an ingenious inventor discovered the way to make serrate edges on gold and silver, clipping the edges of coin went out of fashion. Scientists next devoted much study to means of preventing banknotes and other paper money from being imitated. Even now the Government maintains an extensive staff to combat counterfeiting. The same problem has come up in the use of checks, and machines have been invented to prevent the alteration of figures written on these scraps of paper.

Other problems arose from the need to standardize money. This has been done by making its issuance a Government monopoly. The issuance of checks, however, obviously cannot become a monopoly without destroying the effectiveness of the system. Accordingly, the solution must be sought in other directions. But the difficulties are real. All banknotes in this country have the same dimensions. This makes for convenience. Checks, on the other hand, vary greatly. Many banks supply check forms of different dimensions to their customers. The detailed work of handling them is thereby complicated. Further confusion is contributed by the very diverse forms used by different banks.

One of the other serious difficulties has centred in the trouble often experienced in getting checks cashed. Large concerns which would have preferred to pay their employes by check have been deterred in other years by the knowledge that the saloon was the only place available for many workmen. To cash a check in a saloon meant the purchase of one drink always, and often that led to many other drinks and the squandering of wages. Now that the saloons survive only as clandestine enterprises, even that recourse has been lost. Until places where men and women without bank accounts can cash their checks easily are established, a handicap on the development of the checking system will exist.

One great advantage of checks over money lies in the fact that a check which is stolen or lost may be recovered by the simple expedient of stopping payment at the bank. That device has given rise to a trade within the banking business. In the large banks of New York, for example, the trail of lost checks engages the energies of many hunters.

Sportsmanship is combined with business, and the official who pursues the vagrant scraps of paper has all the zest of the tracker of game in the wilderness. Big game, in fact, is often the quarry sought, and the failure to read the signs aright sometimes is serious enough.

This great volume makes the work of the check hunter important. At the Bank of Manhattan Company, for instance, one person, an assistant teller, is the especially designated watchman of the "stop-payment" check territory. In other days, when gold and banknotes were the medium of exchange, the loss of money was apt to be final. If a man lost a hundred-dollar bill he comforted himself with what philosophy he possessed. He had no hope of retrieving what had disappeared. Of if he made a payment and then found that he had been deceived, he had no redress except through the tedious process of the courts. With checks the matter is simplified. A stop-payment order is sent to the bank and the lost is ordinarily soon found.

The means used are interesting. Every morning the tellers are given a list of the stop-payment orders for the day. Each man and woman memorizes all the names and numbers. In addition to this the assistant teller whose function it is to catch these checks becomes active. "Red flags" are set up. Every bookkeeper, every teller, every clerk who may see the vagrant check is warned. Large sheets of paper with colored printing at the top are distributed. The young men and women who bang away on numerous machines may become ever so absorbed, but they find it difficult to pass the danger sign. A veritable semaphore system has been built up. It is as easy for a trained engineman to carry his train past a red flag as it is for a bank teller to cash a stop-payment check. And when one of the lost is found the hunter is surrounded with a halo of excitement. I saw the expression of such an official who had just captured a stop-payment check for a particularly large amount. The hunter who had toppled his first grizzly or the fisherman who had landed a tarpon could have had no more enthusiasm.

The causes of this stop-order system are in themselves significant. The first and the simplest cause is the mere loss of the check. The stop order is issued almost automatically. According to one of the bank officials charged with the responsibility for supervision of this situation the maker of the check must issue the stop order. The person to whom the check has been made may give warning of the loss. That is all. The bank is not compelled to accept the instructions of any one except the maker. The official continued:

"Other causes are important also. The lost checks are ordinarily small. Sometimes, however, very large checks—I mentioned one for a large amount which was caught this morning—are ordered stopped. The reasons in such cases are numerous. Breach of contract, repudiation of contract, a man repenting of his bargain, explain some of the orders. The bank has no authority to refuse to obey the stop order except in certain rare cases. It does not enjoy being an instrument through which a contract may be repudiated. We feel, in fact, that repudiation is one of the serious causes of trouble at the present time.

"But I would not be understood as implying that breaches of contract or repudiation of contract are frequent occurrences in this quarter. Take the Stock Exchange for example. I know of no place where a higher standard of personal honor prevails. Contracts are made not in writing but by the spoken word. On the floor of the Exchange the simple nod of the head is at all times as good as a signed bond. In the high-grade banks the repudiation of contracts as it is revealed in stop-payment orders always brings scrutiny to the account. If a man were found to be consistently committing breaches of contract, we should decide that his account ought to be removed. We would feel that he was not the sort of man we cared to do business with. But that seldom occurs with us.

"The stoppages come chiefly where contracts are involved because of technical rather than moral questions which are in issue. Checks ought to be cashed immediately. 'Due diligence' is required and whenever an old check—we call it a stale check—is presented for payment the matter is investigated. This is done quickly. Often customers have had their accounts examined before they know that any question had occurred. Then again the bank teller, like the politician, has a long memory. He must have a sound memory as a part of his equipment.

"When I was younger I served as a teller. I knew then and I still know thousands of individuals. I connect the customer with his business or with the place where I first saw him. Further, all good tellers have keen memories for signatures. Any experienced teller can describe peculiar characteristics of the signatures of the customers whose checks come through his window. Some tellers know thousands of signatures in this way. That memory is another of the safeguards thrown around the checking system.

"I have indicated some of the methods used to locate and stop the payment on checks which the maker desires to have refused. A search, high and low, is always made. His account is examined and all his vouchers are listed and immediately the warning is given. When the word comes I always stop whatever I am doing and set the machinery in motion. For months now we have not failed to catch every such check. I knock on wood when I say it for sometimes to fail would be serious. I don't know what would have happened had we missed that check this morning. Happily we found it, and still better, such episodes are not frequent."

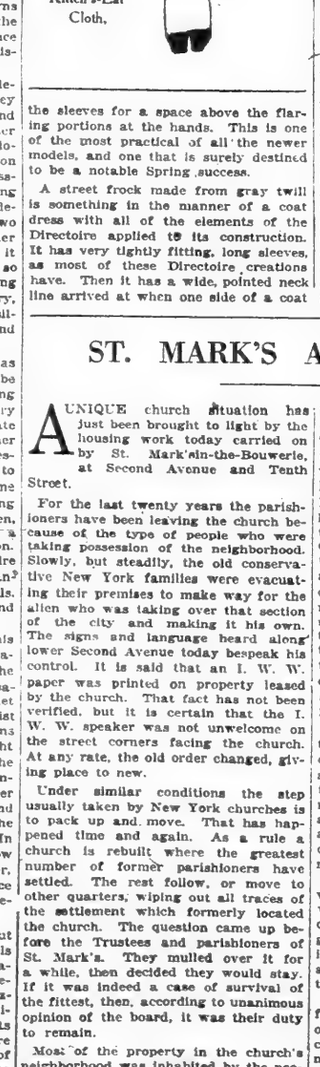
FASHIONS SPRING HINTS

THERE is to be a new mode in the Spring and it is to follow the Directoire with faithfulness. Now, of course, the great question is: What is the Directoire? Small profit lies in going into the history of the thing. It bridged the gap between the French Revolution and the Empire styles. But that is neither here nor there when it comes to the practical point of modern dressing being done in the Directoire fashion. The feverish points of consideration are: First, is the thing practical? Second, is it suited to the expression of our modern time? Well, the verdict of designers is that it is both of these things, so we can proceed to a further business of understanding without any undue worry.

It seems that the American women feel a strong need of something that is different and a distinct change from what they have been wearing, at least so the designers say. They report that the women come to them with dissatisfied looks and wrinkled brows demanding to know what is "new" in the present styles. Then they valiantly bring forth their newest conceptions in the way of the straight one-piece dresses that we have been wearing for so long and are met with peevish frowns and dissatisfied glances. "There's nothing new about those," they complain. And it is the truth—there is nothing new. But, then, we have had the war and the after effects of that great struggle, and we have had Paris sending us gowns along the same old lines and after the same successful ideas, so what chance have we had to obtain anything distinctly new?

Directoire Evening Gown of Yellow Crepe and Pearls.



Directoire Suit of Gray Kitten's-Ear Cloth.

But now the foremost American designers have taken a stand and they announce that they will make up and promote gowns in the Directoire manner for Spring wear. In fact, they are doing so now, and the two illustrations on this page only go to show how successful they are and how truly fascinating the dresses are. One of the leading designers in this city made these two frocks and is making up models after their patterns from day to day. As it is quite easy to see, there is nothing so very startlingly radical about the thing that he is doing, but, on the contrary, with only a few changes, the whole silhouette is given a different line and contour.

Perhaps the American woman has reached the point where she will not be dictated to to the extent of changing all of the style of her garments every season, but she will consent to moderate changes if they do not follow each other in such quick and uninterrupted succession. Now, the authorities seem to agree, she is ready for a change of some sort. She has tired of the unremitting sameness of the gowns that have been, and it is believed she will welcome a complete change for the Spring season. So here is the meaning of the Directoire in its newest interpretation, for it can not be entirely true to its old-time ideals. It must conform with new demands and new situations.

The suit shown in the picture on this page is an interesting Directoire adaptation, for the short coat accentuates the high waist line, which is one of the salient points of the new mode. The jacket hangs straight and loose and the waist line of the skirt snuggles under the arms so that the lines of the skirt fall straight from under the overhanging coat. The collars and cuffs on this suit are another prevalent feature of these newer Directoire styles. They flare and stand out straight and stiff away from the coat to which they are attached. In this instance they are made of yellow pique cut double and stitched together, so that there is every sort of substance to the character of these plainly designed trimmings.

It will be noticed that everything about the Directoire lines makes the models suitable especially for the slighter variety of feminine figure, but the designers, who are, after all, clever wizards, explain that it is a perfectly possible matter to make the frocks and coats adapt themselves to figures of more ample proportions. They have tricks of cutting and fitting that bring the lines into harmony both with the figures they are destined to adorn and with the period which sets the fashion.

A blue serge suit—one of the freshest on the market and just newly launched from the workroom—is made with a coat that has a high waist line, but which is more fitted than the one shown in the picture. There is then attached a fitted and rounded peplum made up of three circular flounces, each about four inches in width. These are lined with tomato-red silk that shows only at rare intervals when the flounces sweep away from the figure and show the color that is their foundation. The collar on this suit is made of white pique, and is shaped so that it stands way up back of the head in the stiffest and most picturesque manner. Then the cuffs are fully five inches in width, are made double, and turn back over the suit sleeves. It is a pretty fashion, and most becoming, when well done.

Another suit, with coat that reaches well below the knees in front and slopes to a shorter length at back, is made of champagne-colored twill. At the point where the severely cut reverse come together there is a yoke line and a link button to hold the coat in place. Then the rest of the coat carries out the straight Directoire line, and the skirt is just tight enough and straight enough to make walking a simple matter. This suit is trimmed with the merest suggestion of an insertion of Roman-striped ribbon running lengthwise of the skirt and inserted at the edges of the coat pockets and along the outer edges of the sleeves for a space above the flaring portions at the hands. This is one of the most practical of all the newer models, and one that is surely destined to be a notable Spring success.

A street frock made from gray twill is something in the manner of a coat dress with all of the elements of the Directoire applied to its construction. It has very tightly fitting, long sleeves, as most of these Directoire creations have. Then it has a wide, pointed neck line arrived at when one side of a coat overdress laps over the other side. There it joins at one point below the pointed line and falls away from the short waist line into the skirt portion. Now by way of trimming this overdress is bound with pale orange silk and is lined with the same thing, so that the lining reveals itself now and again. This gown is quite startlingly new in appearance and most fascinating in the way it is done. It would be the means of converting the most prejudiced mind to the adaptability of the Directoire.

One of the Spring coats that have been suggested in the Directoire mode is made of black taffeta. It is just a succession of tiny black taffeta flounces reaching from the hem to the throat, with a collar that stands high behind the head and about the ears. This ravishing garment is lined with an illusive bit of peach crêpe and has a bit of a picot ribbon in the same shade running round the base of the collar, to be tied in a bow with streaming ends directly in the centre of the back. The way this wrap achieves a Directoire silhouette underneath all its ruffings is a beautiful thing to behold, and if it is any criterion of the wraps to be under the approaching régime, then welcome the change.

A wrap that would be best for dress occasions is a combination of nigger brown velvet and sand-colored taffeta. There is a yoke forming the high-waisted Directoire line; a huge, folding collar; big cuffs and an ample band around the bottom—all made of the heavier material. Then what is left of surface to be covered is made of the taffeta, and the lining is a printed chiffon cleverly combining the two tones in its own coloring, with enough spots of red to make it brilliantly attractive.

There are all sorts of possibilities in the thinner materials waiting to be formed into Directoire modes. There are the lighter weight silks and the chiffons which were made for just such a purpose as this. The high waists and the long, slim skirts are destined to look their best when made from these more fragile fabrics. Chiffons and thin silks for the evening gowns, with beaded and embroidered trimmings, with plenty of sprinklings of tulle—these are the elements of the dressier types of the gowns that are to be.

Stripes are a real Directoire expression, and there is one little frock made of striped light blue and white Summer silk covered with a veiling of gray-blue chiffon that would attract any woman's attention. There is nothing to it but a short waist, a slim skirt, a square-cut, rather low neck and a pair of sleeves that manage to reach the hands as gracefully as ever any pair of sleeves managed to do in all the world. And there is a sash way under the arms, made of a darker blue velvet ribbon. It is as simple as any of those gowns we have clung to so lovingly, but it has possibilities of giving any woman a new kind of attractiveness.

Of course the hats that will have to go with these Directoire gowns will necessarily be more of the picture type than we have had for some time. There is in this new dress influence a real chance for the millinery designers to outdo themselves—to adopt the Directoire to our modern day and our modern thoughts, and therewith provide a welcome change for the women wearers, who, when all is said and done, are the deciding factors in any case of dress.

Then it comes to a statement of what are the dominant features of the Directoire mode as it is proposed to be applied to our dressing of today. Well, these are the main points:

Skirts short, tight, draped and undraped, but always clinging to the figure and starting from a point established by the bodice and placed some inches above a normal waist line.

Sleeves long and tightly fitted, reaching to the hands and very often flaring there in a sort of cap.

Waists short, rather snugly fitted, with low-cut necks.

Collars high and stiff and flaring, made more often of the heavier fabrics that lend themselves easily to this sort of a design.

Other than this, there is no decided change and on the whole it seems a happy suggestion, since we are always on the lookout for newer and more interesting ways of dressing the feminine figure—ways that will not be too radical to startle us out of our well-loved and dearly acquired freedom of dress and that will, at the same time, allow us to present to the world something of an innovation.

ST. MARK'S AS LANDLORD

A UNIQUE church situation has just been brought to light by the housing work today carried on by St. Mark'sin-the-Bouwerie, at Second Avenue and Tenth Street.

For the last twenty years the parishioners have been leaving the church because of the type of people who were taking possession of the neighborhood. Slowly, but steadily, the old conservative New York families were evacuating their premises to make way for the alien who was taking over that section of the city and making it his own. The signs and language heard along lower Second Avenue today bespeak his control. It is said that an I. W. W. paper was printed on property leased by the church. That fact has not been verified, but it is certain that the I. W. W. speaker was not unwelcome on the street corners facing the church. At any rate, the old order changed, giving place to new.

Under similar conditions the step usually taken by New York churches is to pack up and move. That has happened time and again. As a rule a church is rebuilt where the greatest number of former parishioners have settled. The rest follow, or move to other quarters, wiping out all traces of the settlement which formerly located the church. The question came up before the Trustees and parishioners of St. Mark's. They mulled over it for a while, then decided they would stay. If it was indeed a case of survival of the fittest, then, according to unanimous opinion of the board, it was their duty to remain.

Most of the property in the church's neighborhood was inhabited by the people who had made their homes there within the past twenty years; in a word, the people who had supplanted the original tenants. It may be that not the least cause for the change in tenancy was the deterioration of the houses. They were unattractive, insanitary and dirty. The yards and alleys were filled with rubbish and cans. The rooms had few, if any, of the improvements that would attract people who desired comfortable homes.

It was decided to tackle the problem from the housing angle. The church owned a great deal of property, but the bulk of it was not in any way connected with or related to its general work. There was little risk taken, inasmuch as the housing situation was such as to warrant considerable expenditure on housing renovation and improvement. Before going ahead with their plans, however, the church officials called in the United States Mortgage and Trust Company to appraise their property and tell them where they stood financially and from a real estate standpoint. A comprehensive survey was made. The results, while showing a conservative real estate investment of the funds of the church, indicated but an average return of 4.2 per cent., and brought out the fact that the investments had no connection with, nor rendered any assistance to, the religious needs of the parish.

It was shown that by the sale of certain downtown properties and the purchase and alteration of the old but substantial houses in the neighborhood, the funds could be reinvested with a net return of more than double the amount of income previously received, at the same time benefiting not only the church but the parishioners and community as well.

The work of renovating the houses was started last year. The old tenants were asked to go. Backyards were cleaned up and turned into attractive gardens, the buildings were remodeled, improvements of the latest type added, and the properties turned into one and two room apartments.

The church has now utilized all of its funds available for this purpose, and, in order to carry on the work, a housing corporation has been formed to whose membership the parishioners of the church have been admitted. In this way their investments tend directly to improve and extend the work and influence of the parish.

The houses that have been completed are already filled. The people that have rented them are mostly literary and professional folk who for artistic and business reasons prefer to live in that section of the city. Most satisfactory of all to the members of the church is the fact that the constituency of the parish has been greatly increased. What is equally important is the fact that the average income of the church funds has risen 40 per cent.

"I'D RATHER WALK"

WALK—and health and youth walk continually with you. For busy women—in office, store, or home—a good, brisk, daily walk is a life saver! There's always a "wonderful something" about the girl who can go ahead with a swing-along step. She gets the whole world with her. But first of all, her SHOES must be right for walking, or she can't walk.

GROUND-GRIPPER

are comfortable, sensible shoes for real HUMANS. They give full play to all the delicate bones and muscles in your feet. They flex with your feet, in every part. They set your blood circulating freely;—tone up your whole system;—carry you out to your day's work with the poise and drive that spell success. Walking is the best medicine in the world,—and Ground Grippers make you want to walk.

So no matter how many different kinds of so-called "dress" shoes you may have, get a pair of Ground Grippers;—sturdy, soft, comfortable;—just what you need for street and business wear, for shopping around, or when out for an hour of fresh air. Encourage your feet to help themselves.

We have Ground Gripper Shoes for every member of the family

SOCIETY CURRENT DOINGS

THE last days of the social season, before the advent of Lent, will be crowded with events, many of them to be brilliant functions, sponsored by the fashionable world.

The chief event of this week, no doubt, will be the entertainment which the Junior Auxiliary of St. Luke's Hospital Social Service is to stage at the Plaza, on Tuesday and Wednesday nights. Miss Grace R. Henry, aside from her duties at the Junior League office, has been giving up much of her time to the directing and staging of the two main features of the entertainment, "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," by Anatole France, interpolated with songs and dances, and a French medieval pageant.

The names of those in the cast and in the dances and pageant have already been announced, and they include many of the very prominent society girls. Miss Eleanor Cromwell of 711 Park Avenue is receiving applications for tickets, and society is practically overwhelming her with orders for tickets.

There are no other affairs of note to clash on these two nights, and it looks now as if the deserving cause for which the affair is being given will be largely benefited. Miss Dorothy Battle is doing splendid work along the line of publicity.

Mrs. George Blagden, Mrs. J. Wray Cleveland, Mrs. William Fahnestock, Mrs. Percy R. Pyne, Mrs. William Rumsey, Mrs. A. Filmore Hyde, Mrs. Edward H. Van Ingen and Mrs. Schuyler N. Warren are among the additional patronesses just announced.

Several weddings fall due this week, one of considerable social import to take place in Bordeaux, France, when Mlle. Anne Guestier, a member of a prominent family of that city, becomes the bride of Robert Walton Goelet of New York. The civil ceremony will be performed tomorrow and the religious ceremony on Tuesday. Mr. Goelet, who will soon bring his bride to New York, is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet.

Miss Ruth Gaynor, daughter of the late Mayor Gaynor and Mrs. Gaynor, will be married tomorrow to John Townshend Rennard, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Clifford Rennard of 70 East Seventy-seventh Street, in the chantry of St. Thomas's Church. A small reception will follow at the Hotel Gotham.

On Tuesday comes the wedding of Miss Anne Morris Olyphant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Talbot Olyphant of 911 Park Avenue, and John de Peyster Douw, son of the late Volckert Douw of Annapolis, Md., which is to be celebrated in the chapel of St. Bartholomew's Church.

Entertainments for the week are varied and interesting.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustavus T. Kirby are giving a reception at their town house this afternoon. On Tuesday Mrs. Reginald Ronalds will entertain at a dinner dance at the St. Regis. Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer is to be a dinner hostess on Wednesday. On Saturday Mrs. Moses Taylor is giving a dinner for her daughter, Miss Marion Taylor, at 701 Park Avenue. The Metropolitan Dance at the Ritz falls due on Saturday night.

A new set of four informal subscription dances, known as the Coffee Dances, are being held on alternate Monday evenings at the Cosmopolitan Club. The first one held last Monday was largely attended. The subscribers came from dinners to have their coffee in the club and afterward dancing and a buffet supper.

This is really the first novelty of the season. Of course, everybody drinks coffee, and there is no ban against it as yet. At the start of the prohibition edict, when there was so much talk about home brew, it was said by some that "when the writer of the society column can truthfully say that the charming hostess is a capable brewer, complaints about the lack of men at social functions will cease." Coffee steps in now as the survival of the fittest.

Monday night will see the first appearance of the Chicago Opera Company at the late Oscar Hammerstein's temple of music, the Manhattan Opera House. The mantle of Campanini has descended upon the shoulders of Mary Garden, and she will come back to the stage of her first American triumphs as a general director.

Many prominent people have taken boxes for the season. Among the boxholders and patrons this season are Harold F. McCormick, John Aspegren, Sir Joseph and Lady Duveen, Mrs. J. F. Havemeyer, William J. Sloane, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Thomas, H. H. Flagler, Frank Clay Griswold, Lewis Iselin, Francis K. Pendleton, Henry W. Taft and many others of note.

Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle, Mrs. McDougall Hawkes, Mrs. Henry Mottet, Mrs. Francis McNeil Bacon, Mrs. F. Gray Griswold and Mrs. Montgomery Hare are among those who will receive at the private view on Tuesday at the gallery of the Museum of French Art, 599 Fifth Avenue, at the fourth official loan exhibition. The exhibition of porcelains of the eighteenth century will continue until Feb. 6.

Mrs. Vincent Astor has loaned her house for a meeting and recital on Thursday afternoon, at 4:45 o'clock, to be given under the auspices and for the benefit of the French Restoration Fund, which rebuilds schools in France through the co-operation of American children. Prominent artists have given their services for the occasion. Mlle. Sartoris, a granddaughter of General Grant, is receiving applications for tickets at 15 Park Row.

The second annual ball of the First Reserve Squadron Post will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on Monday evening. The membership of the post is limited to men in the air service overseas, and Dr. E. Garnsey Brownell is the Commander. Among the celebrated aces who will act as ushers are Eddie Rickenbacker, Philip J. Roosevelt, Douglas Campbell, Robert Curry, Lieut. Col. Cedric Faunt le Roy and Major Tom Lanphier.

Mrs. Charles Addison Miller, Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Mrs. James W. Gerard, Mrs. Edward S. Isham, Mrs. Schuyler Schieffelin, Mrs. Horner Foot and Mrs. Seth Low are the patronesses who will be in the receiving line.

On Friday night the Woman's Auxiliary of the Union Settlement will realize the reward of much effort put forth to make their benefit ball a success. No one can deny that it is hard work these days staging a ball, even without the usual frills of entertainment. But the Union Settlement ball has always been a ball pure and simple, and folk who like to dance will flock to the ballroom at the Ritz-Carlton on the night in question.

Miss Annie Burr Auchincloss heads the débutante committee, and Oliver G. Jennings is acting as Chairman of the Floor Committee. They will both have notable assistance in the way of a selected group of débutantes and young men.

Among the boxholders will be Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Mrs. Reginald Barclay, Mrs. Edwin M. Bulkley, Mrs. James B. Clemens, Mrs. Henry P. Davison, Mrs. J. Horace Harding, Mrs. Edward S. Harkness, Mrs. Walter B. James, Mrs. D. Hunter McAlpin, Mrs. A. Henry Moale, Mrs. Herbert L. Pratt, Mrs. William G. Rockefeller, Mrs. William A. Read and Mrs. Henry E. Meeker.

Tomorrow night comes the Southern Charity Ball, sponsored by the New York Southern Society, and it will be held as usual in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. The Southern Society, which is one of the oldest in the city, designed to perpetuate the customs of the South, has in time past furnished aid to many needy families. The last few months has seen an increase in these calls for assistance.

Robert Adamson is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, which includes Arnold R. Boyd and T. D. Green. There is a long list of patronesses.

A recital in period costumes, followed by a St. Valentine dance, is to be held on Tuesday evening, Feb. 15, at the MacDowell Club Galleries, 108 West Fifty-fifth Street. It will be held under the auspices of the National Association for the Improvement of American Speech, of which Miss Dagmar Perkins is President.

Incidental to the coming Wellesley College campaign, a recital will be given by Mme. Matzenauer on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 5, in the ballroom at the home of Adolph Lewisohn, 881 Fifth Avenue.

Mrs. Warren G. Harding, wife of the President-elect and soon to step in as the first lady of the land, has become a sustaining member of the New York Women's League for Animals, of which Mrs. James Speyer is President.

The league is sponsoring several interesting events, for their operating expenses have gone up considerably. The annual Pomeranian show, at the Waldorf-Astoria on Jan. 28, is for the benefit of the league. Mrs. Herbert Speyer has donated a silver trophy and Mrs. Herbert Beecher Nichols is to represent the league at the show.

Following the Pomeranian show a bridge will be held at the Ritz-Carlton on Feb. 8, the ballroom having been donated for the occasion. There will be the usual prizes, among them Mrs. Speyer's parterre box at the opera. Other benefits are planned for the Spring, a bazaar in March, an animal fair in April, and the annual tag day in May.

The night of the Charity Ball approaches—Feb. 1, to be exact, and the place, the Waldorf-Astoria. The patrons and patronesses were announced recently, and they include nearly five hundred of the most representative men and women of New York.

A poster has been issued depicting a baby blowing a trumpet, and this, no doubt, will increase the sale of tickets for the deserving cause for which the ball has been given, since Civil War days—the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital.

Tickets are $5 each and may be obtained from the principal hotels, from members of the ball committee, also from the President of the ball, Mrs. James W. Gerard, 1,015 Fifth Avenue; Mrs. Frank S. Witherbee, 4 Fifth Avenue, who is the Treasurer, and also from Mrs. Robert L. Gerry, 60 East Seventy-ninth Street, the Executive Secretary. Miss Florence V. Doane, 18 East Twenty-fourth Street, is also receiving applications. The price of tickets is exactly what it was sixty-four years ago, at the first ball given at the Academy of Music.

And the ball itself will be conducted on the same lines as in those far-away days. The Floor Committee will form a great half circle in the grand ballroom as a guard for the traditional grand march, headed by the President and other officials and distinguished guests. The march ends at the dais. Charity Ball procedure provides that the President, after stepping upon the dais, turning, gives a wave of her hand. That officially opens the ball.

Cupid's Ball, in the Della Robbia Room of the Hotel Vanderbilt, in behalf of Free Milk for Italy, falls due Monday evening, Jan. 31. The decorations will suggest St. Valentine's Day, for pink hearts on streamers are to be draped everywhere, while little Cupids in person will select the candidates for the most beautiful costumes with their little golden arrows.

Costume dinners are to be given preceding the ball in the Far East Room of the Vanderbilt. Among the hosts and hostesses will be Mr. and Mrs. John Adams Drake, the latter being President of Free Milk for Italy. Among the boxholders will be Mrs. Edward N. Breitung, Mrs. Walton H. Marshall, Mrs. Edward R. Campbell, Mrs. Peter Larson, Mrs. Vito G. Cantasano and the Rev. W. John Murray.

Mrs. Breitung is acting as Chairman of the ball and the Princess Rospigliosi Honorary Chairman.

The Mardi Gras ball for the benefit of the Southern Industrial Educational Association, to be held at the Ritz-Carlton on Feb. 8, promises much in the way of the spectacular.

Miss Kathleen Beale Crawford, the débutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Gordon Crawford, has been chosen as the Queen of the pageant, which is being arranged by Miss Belle Kinney.

Mrs. Blanche Shoemaker Wagstaff has written a prologue for the occasion, which will be spoken by Miss Thais Lawton. Miss Helene Maynard, an artist, is to assist as stage manager. Mrs. William B. Leeds, Mrs. G. Tracy Rogers, Mrs. Juan Ceballos, Miss Caroline T. Burkkam, Mrs. Livingston Rowe Schuyler, Mrs. Frederic W. Rhinelander and Mrs. Meredith Langstaff are heads of committees. Mme. Luboszke is to appear in the Egyptian group.

Mrs. Algernon Sydney Sullivan is President of the New York auxiliary of the association. Mrs. Elizabeth H. Gregory is selecting the professional talent and Edward Simmons Hall is to head the Floor Committee.

The Russian Isba is coming again. The Commonwealth Centre, it is announced, will give as the first performance, under its nationalisation centre of arts, the Isba, at the Lexington Theatre for the week beginning Jan. 31. Part of the proceeds of the week will be given to the Russian refugee children.

GOVERNMENT'S PAPER WASTE

How Red Tape Causes Needless Expense in the Various Departments.

By CASPAR F. GOODRICH, Rear Admiral, Retired.

IT may seem odd to associate two terms which, at first sight, appear to have no connection whatever, but in fact they are intimately related, almost as much as are the submarine telegraph cable and wireless telegraphy with the overcentralization manifested in present business management at the Navy Department. At some other time we may take up the latter branch of the subject. Astonishing and attractive as it is, today we pass it by and confine ourselves to the topic briefly stated in the title of this paper.

We are admittedly confronted with a shortage of paper. Of course the newspapers are the greatest participants in the "drunken orgy of paper use," as Mr. Munsey expresses it, but the Government, if one may believe from conference with representatives of several departments, is even more guilty, since it appears to pay little heed to this important economic question, which has become a nightmare with the press publisher. The Government demands multitudinous reports and returns, many of which are, so one hears, merely marked "F. F." characters meaning "File and Forget." Why should not the documents to which they apply be eliminated at the outset and the paper they consume be saved? A certain distinguished army officer holds that the remedy lies in Congressional action, the cutting down of the clerical force in all departments to one-third the present number. The cure is promising in the extreme, and although drastic could convert a large body of consumers into much needed producers. The burden of official correspondence rests heavily upon our ship captains and takes up time which they had far better devote to their commands.

The present practice leads infallibly to a vicious centralization of power and detracts sadly from the initiative of the man on the spot who can, in the vast majority of cases, deal more intelligently with the problem confronting him than can his junior in Washington who too often decides upon the line of action which his senior afloat must follow. There is too much red tape in our management of governmental affairs and too much centralization. Any doubt on that point will be at once dispelled by a glance at the huge volume containing the Navy Regulations. To compare it with an earlier issue, say of 1832, one is a mountain, the other a mole hill. The fifty or sixty tiny pages of the one have grown into thousands of octavo in the other. To master the contents of the latter, other and much more important duties must be sacrificed. Why an insistence on so meticulous an attempt to deal with every conceivable contingency in total disregard of the ability of the officer at the front to meet the situation as it arises? One officer of high rank was even heard to say that the first thing he would do on taking command of a fleet in time of war would be to order thrown overboard all copies of the ponderous tome.

The Articles of War, good common sense, and the navy's traditions would, he holds, remain as sufficient guide. The army's business is, possibly, in even worse case, so we hear. It, again, would profit by the abolition of two-thirds of the typewriters that now turn out clouds of letters, of which and of their answers the fate is to be marked "F. F." Doubtless all the departments are similarly overprovided with these paper destroying machines. Imagine the relief so sweeping a measure as here hinted at would bring to the taxpayer. If more officials had in consequence to write their letters in longhand one wonders whether the Government's business would really suffer? One thing is certain—our forests of spruce, hemlock and poplar would stand a better chance than now of enduring, whereas at present they seem to be doomed. A check placed upon this tendency to centralization by the suppression in Government departments of the majority of these deadly instruments would help in this good cause. Useful as they doubtless are in reason, they have proved themselves, in excess, to be potent for harm to our fast-disappearing trees; while they stimulate a policy of centralization which is directly opposed to efficient service.

I once told Secretary Long that he could either have well-trained ships, ready for any service, or perambulating offices, but that he could not have both at once. What was true in 1897 is even more true today. Cut out the red tape, reduce reports and returns to a fraction of their present volume, and then you can justly hold the captain afloat to a strict accountability if his ship falls below the requisite standard in target practice, contentment and general efficiency. This you cannot do so long as he has to devote so much of his time to his paper work. The way to start this reform is to discharge a large majority of the Government clerks in Washington and bring to a close the maleficent thralldom of the typewriter. Of course there will be large protests from every office affected, but all will quiet down after the exodus and the Government's business will proceed even more smoothly than before.

TENNIS UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

DR. CHALMERS MITCHELL, an Englishman who recently flew from Cairo to Cape Town and made landings during the journey, tells of a curious experience in a Central African British protectorate where he spent a day and night during his flight. The wilds hemmed in the little settlement so closely that the jungle could not be kept out. The white men's houses were like toy homes in the middle of a vast menagerie, and men and women there go armed by day, so bold are the wild beasts sometimes; at night it is well to stay indoors, unless one ventures abroad with a group, all well armed and carrying flaring lights or torches.

Dr. Mitchell and his hostess, a young English matron, were having an exciting game of tennis after his landing when the court was invaded by two frightened bucks pursued by a leopard. "My hostess dropped her racket, caught her skirts in both hands and bolted for the house. I followed without a second look," said Dr. Mitchell, in an account of the experience.

"The next-door neighbor, however, attracted by the frightened screams, caught up his gun and got a shot at the leopard before it could spring on either of the bucks. The wounded cat turned tail and leaped back into the jungle behind the tennis court, but the buck could not stop, and went careening across the street, crashed through a garden and a pergola there, and disappeared into the bush beyond.

"I've had lots worse things happen to me here," his hostess told Dr. Mitchell, nonchalantly, as she picked up her tennis racket and prepared to go on with the game.

THE A. & S. HALF-YEARLY SALE OF FURNITURE

Marks the Welcome Return to a New Low Price Level

WE paved the way for this Furniture Sale by the drastic price-reductions in November, which cleared our stocks thoroughly, and gave us ready cash to buy the splendid Furniture—at amazingly low prices—of which we found makers most eager to dispose.

This Furniture has been coming in for the sale at an average of a carload a day since the beginning of the month. There are beautiful Bedroom and Dining Room Suites; there is much luxurious Living Room Furniture, at 40% less than the maker's previous prices. It is important to note that all this specially purchased furniture is placed on our floors AT THE SALE PRICE. It is not marked first at a purposely higher price, so that it can appear at a reduced price in the sale.

In addition, OUR ENTIRE STOCK OF FURNITURE which was on our floors before the arrival of the specially purchased goods, shows

Price-Reductions of 10 to 50 per cent.

There are no exceptions. And our original prices were in themselves low.

The Sale is a particularly important event, because it meets to a very marked degree the present-day demands for lower prices, especially in home-furnishings. And thus it performs an important—and typical—A. & S. service to our customers.

MR. EDISON'S "LIFE UNITS"

Hundred Trillion in Human Body May Scatter After Death—Machine to Register Them

By A. D. ROTHMAN.

WITHOUT a peer in the field of scientific invention, Thomas Edison has announced his entrance into a new sphere, that of psychic research. This may or may not strike one as surprising. Great scientists of this and a previous day have engaged themselves with the problems that come after chemistry and physics. Lodge, noted as a physicist, is now better known as a psychist. Hyslop was a psychologist of note before his ventures into the great untried field of the hereafter. The number of prominent investigators is large. McDougall, noted psychologist, has cast his lot with those who see in an examination of spiritiicism a vast enterprise yet to be properly exploited. But it can be safely asserted that no one today has approached the myriad problems that nestle within the heart of the greater problem of the life hereafter with half the skill or scientific acumen that has Mr. Edison.

Announcements of Mr. Edison's enterprise have been greatly misunderstood. The great inventor has been disappointed and at times amused at the treatment his new undertaking has received at the hands of the public. Fellow-scientists have looked askance; clericals have warned him not to trespass on lands not his own; while some well-educated persons have tended to quarrel with him concerning terms, the goal set, and the methods employed. Discouragement, however, is a characteristic so thoroughly foreign to this man of science that he is pursuing his investigations without a thought to the commentators or critics. Far and above everything else he feels that his investigations are worth while—whether success attends them is not the sole criterion. He knows that many will quarrel with him, many will misunderstand him. But he knows, too, that ten million men and women who have lost dear ones in the war are hungering for word or knowledge as to the existence of life after the life we know. If his investigations can give them comfort, he thinks he will be well repaid: if the results of his inquiries add to the total knowledge of the elusive phenomena of life and after-life he will be satisfied with that contribution to science.

Not a Mystic or Spiritist.

Mr. Edison is an old man by the count of years. In mental vigor he is vitally young. Called upon to explain his theories and beliefs, his problems and applications in the new venture, it was remarkable to note the facility with which he found examples and figures from everyday existence to illustrate some subtle or difficult point. There wasn't a token of the mystic or spiritist about him. He spoke in terms of science, in terms of common sense, in terms of the day-in-and-day-out things of life; his mind dwelt only upon a logical problem, his eyes looked only into a world where energies and forces and their interplay were objects perceived. He hasn't renounced science from any point of view as concerns his new problems. It is Mr. Edison, the scientist, that is applying all his powers and all his knowledge to the questions of life and death and life thereafter.

"I do not know what the word 'spiritual' means," he said every time that the writer used the word in the course of two interviews with Mr. Edison. "I am not interested in matters of spirit. I am conducting a laboratory experiment."

The writer was unwilling to give up the idea. He had traveled twice to Orange, the centre of activity of the inventor, after some correspondence with Mr. Edison and the latter's associate and assistant, Mr. Meadowcroft, thinking that the "spiritual" idea might be developed. He had pointed out to Mr. Edison, in the letter preceding the first invitation to Orange, that nothing could equal the "great interest the question of personal immortality has aroused in English-speaking countries at the present time, due especially to the war."

Further he had written to Mr. Edison that the "cycle of belief, first in the efficacy and all-importance of material things, and then in idealism, again gave way to a confidence in the potency of machinery and science during the war; followed in turn by the post-war period of faith in spiritual things. But the movement at this stage is not just merely idealist. It is tinctured by a strong spiritistic element. Mothers, sisters, wives and sweethearts who have lost their beloved in the war, find their souls hungering for them. They search for the assurance that these lost are persisting in a life hereafter. Nowhere, I think, has this spiritistic feeling taken such great sway as in British countries and English-speaking lands. The number of famous men who have declared that they are in possession of complete evidence of the existence of departed ones is large; the army of mediums and boogie-boogies who falsely and maliciously mislead the trusting and bereft has grown; the true believers in personal immortality, the life hereafter, are multiplied into a vast host. Here is the situation: You, it becomes known, are investigating the problem, the question whether personality persists after so-called 'body-death. The confidence in you throughout the world is great. People everywhere are anxiously awaiting word from you."

Working on His Machine.

Mr. Edison, however, was not desirous of discussing spiritualism or delving deeply into the questions surrounding personal immortality. He was even very reluctant to discuss the machine he was reported to be building for the apprehension of messages from the dead. He did admit that he was engaged—had been engaged for a number of years—in the construction of such an apparatus. He even indicated the principle upon which he felt it would work, namely, upon the principle of control, whereby a man with one-eighth of a horsepower is able to set into motion machinery with hundreds of thousands of horsepower. Beyond that, however, he was not prepared at the present time to speak. He emphasized during both of the writer's visits to Orange that the public could not possibly be interested just now in a technical explanation of mechanistic theory and practice lying behind the apparatus. What the public is interested in, Mr. Edison pointed out, is results only, and that was what he was striving for.

During the first interview with the famous scientist, the writer listened to a general explanation of Mr. Edison's theories concerning life, and a review of the whole subject which had gained so much popular attention. At the interview following, a series of ten questions was submitted to Mr. Edison, based on the first talk. To many of these questions Mr. Edison asked that the matter of the previous interview and more specifically earlier outgivings be applied in answer. At the same time, he interspersed here and there further explanation of the difficult subject, in the desire to make clear things probably subtle to the lay mind. The high lights of Mr. Edison's theory of life, death, and the life thereafter are thus outlined.

Mr. Edison does not believe that any part of man, whether it be his body or mind, is other than the result of physico-chemical reactions. Life he conceives as a series of "units" motivated by physical and chemical reactions. Memory, or that part of life which goes to make up the complex of emotions, feelings, desires, tendencies and intrinsic peculiarities of the individual, Mr. Edison believes to be our personalities. These personalities are various groups of units within the larger group that constitutes life. When so-called "death" appears to drive life from our bodies Mr. Edison thinks that our personality "units" do not die, but continue to exist as substantial material things. That they are not perceptible to human senses even with the aid of instruments is because they are infinitely small—far smaller than the human mind can conceive. He estimates that the human body is composed of 100,000,000,000,000 of these units. Even huge aggregates of them are not sufficiently large to be apprehended by the human senses, no matter what existing artificial help they enlist.

Asked for a specific exposition of his "unit theory" of life, for use as a quotation in this article, Mr. Edison asked that a former statement setting forth concisely his ideas on the subject be used. In this publication [The Cosmopolitan Magazine] Mr. Edison stated:

"I believe that life, like matter, is indestructible. There has always been a certain amount of life in this world, and there will always be the same amount. You cannot create life; you cannot destroy life; you cannot multiply life.

"I believe our bodies are composed of myriads and myriads of infinitesimal entities, each in itself a unit of life, which band together to build a man. We have taken for granted that each of us is a unit. We think of a cat, an elephant, a horse, a fish and so on as units. I am convinced that such thinking is basically wrong. All these things appear to be units only for the reason that the life entities of which I speak are far too small to be detected even with the ultra-microscope.

"In our bodies these entities constantly rebuild our tissues to replace those which are constantly wearing out. They watch after functions of the various organs, just as the engineers in a power house see that the machinery is kept in perfect order. Once conditions in the body become unsatisfactory in the body, either through a fatal sickness, fatal accident or old age, the entities simply depart from the body and leave little more than an empty structure behind. Being indefatigable workers, they naturally seek something else to do. They either enter into the body of another man or even start work on some other form of life. At any rate, there is a fixed number of these, and it is the same entities that have served over and over again."

"Units" in Plant Life.

Mr. Edison illustrated to the writer how a "plant" which to the casual observer appears as a complete unit is really the composite of a great number of units.

"There is a plant known as the 'sea-bush,'" he said, "which grows in the ocean. It illustrates by synthesis what I have attempted to illustrate by analysis—that life is composed of an aggregate of individuals. It grows through the efforts of insects."

The inventor broke off to take a pencil from his pocket and draw a picture of the plant. His hand moved firmly as it sketched the simple, flowing lines of the sea-bush. He resumed:

"These insects, by infinite labor, build up this wavy, feathery little tree. Unit upon unit they construct it until the whole thing is complete. We look upon the whole of it and think it is a unit. It is not a unit. Like man, it is an aggregate of units."

Mr. Edison made a rough estimate of the number of entities he believed composed the body of the individual man.

"One with fourteen ciphers after it denotes the number—at least one hundred trillion entities go to make up a single man. I estimate roughly that there are about 20,000,000,000 cells in the body, and each cell is a commune of 5,000 entities."

Further light on the "unit theory" is cast by other of Mr. Edison's expressions. For instance, he has stated:

"The individuals in the aggregate which we call 'a man,' the members of the swarm which (to some extent by chance) have collected to make that man, are 95 per cent. workers and 5 per cent. directors. The workers cannot stop even though something may compel them from their habitat, that which has been the 'body' of 'a man.' They must go to something else to build, as, for instance, to corn, a tree, grass—whatever may be—always working under the direction of the higher type among them. These, by the way, will be responsible, as they dominate or fail to, or in accordance with their aspirations, for the character of that which now is built.

Bad and Good Men.

"In the case of a 'man,' for example, he may be 'bad' or 'good,' in accordance with the trend of these dominant individuals or in accordance with the majority quality of the individuals which have gathered, more or less by chance, in the swarm which makes him up. He is 'good' if 'good' individuals are more numerous in it and dominate, and 'bad' if the reverse occurs.

"Instances of startling ability, such as that, for example, which characterize a Rockefeller, are beginning to indicate to me the chance gathering into swarms of individuals in which qualities of a certain kind are paramount."

The second question asked Mr. Edison was:

"Can the 'unit theory' be applied to the 'personality'?"

In this instance Mr. Edison again referred to earlier scripts, which recorded the inventor's opinion as follows:

"Numerous experiments conducted by medical scientists have revealed that the memory is located in a certain section of the human brain called the fold of Broca. If the units of life which compose an individual's memory hold together after that individual's 'death,' is it not within range of possibility, to say the least, that these memory swarms could retain the powers they formerly possessed, and thus retain what we call the individual's personality after 'dissolution' of the body? If so, then that individual's memory, or personality, ought to be able to function as before."

From the foregoing paragraph it can be seen that Mr. Edison conceives personality to be virtually nothing more than memory as amplified by pre-natal determination of character and mental equipment. Some of the greatest thinkers of our day agree with Mr. Edison on that score. Without memory not a single accomplishment that is especially characteristic of man as differentiated from the beast would be possible. Without memory every effort would be like finding one's way up an unknown street in an unknown world totally unlike our own, and no matter how often one traveled that street always the same difficulty would attend progress thereon. An attempt to conceive life without memory makes of the former a veritable nightmare. Memory exists in the simplest forms of life in the guise of habit or instinct. Without memory in one form or another, life would probably disappear from the face of the earth forthwith.

Memory and "Personality."

Memory is the close kin of personality. Our past, the events and quality of our lives previous to this moment, is carried by each of us with him into the future. The things he has learned, the important record of what he has felt, believed, aspired, what he has been and hoped to be, each man takes with him from yesterday into today and from today he will carry it into tomorrow. This memory as it is applied to the conditions that confront a man each moment is his personality.

In answer to the question, "What is your conception of death?" Mr. Edison offered the following concise expression of belief:

"We say a man dies. Perhaps, in a sense, the term is accurate when the aggregate which we have called a man ceases to function as an aggregate and, therefore, no longer can be called a man; but the expression is not at all accurate if by it we mean that the life which kept that man at work or play ceases to exist. Life does not cease to exist.

"The life units which have formed that man do not die. They merely pass

HIGH FINANCE FOR PIKERS

Foreign Exchange Is the Chosen Playground of Relatively Small Investors

By WILLIAM L. CHENERY.

FOREIGN money is the lure which is leading large numbers of Americans into the field of international speculation. Franc, lira, mark, crown, drachma, florin and lei are beacons which are inducing many to seek sudden fortune. A topsy-turvy world has brought about a situation where almost anything might happen. Out of the financial wreckage people who in other years regarded postal banks as hardly secure enough to house their savings hope to salvage large gains. They count upon the latent capacity of the Old World to restore the familiar values which existed before Wilhelm Hohenzollern gave the word that brought undreamed of desolation to so many races.

House servants, laborers, artisans, clerks, farmers, people with small earnings and little opportunity for accumulation are conspicuous investors in foreign exchange. Ordinary speculators with large funds and credits are not notably in the field. The banks discourage speculation in foreign money, and other opportunities are more tempting. During the last twelve months the money of most of the important foreign countries—with the exception of Great Britain, Germany and Sweden—has depreciated when measured by American dollars. A downward movement such as that does not attract large speculators. But it does not deter small ones. Consequently the present paradoxical situation.

Unprecedented Condition Here.

Nothing like the present condition has ever been seen in this country. It has come about largely because the United States is a polyglot nation. Americans have come from nearly every country. Most of the recent comers have relations in Europe. During the last five or six years many of them have been sending money to friends and kinsfolk in the old countries. The habit of buying foreign money was thus developed. When the catastrophe came and the foundations of European finance seemed to be so grievously shattered, a great opportunity appeared to be at hand. In addition to buying money to transmit home, others began to purchase depreciated foreign currency in the expectation of speculative gains.

Buyers of German marks were among the first in the field. Germany has been called the centre of the old European industrial system. The foundation of Germany's prosperity seemed to be as secure as anything in life. When the mark, which had been the rough equivalent of the American quarter, sank in value until it would not purchase a two-cent stamp, the vistas of riches opened to many. Germany must come back. The native productivity of a great nation of sixty million educated, well-trained people could not be permanently destroyed even by a great war, it was argued. And so many began to buy marks with the purpose of holding them until their value had been restored.

House Servant Typical Investor.

The same thing has taken place in varying degrees with other countries. At one of the larger banks the manager of the foreign exchange department said that a house servant was typical of the present investors in foreign money. "One of my friends in Philadelphia," said he, "employs a Czechoslovak girl as a maid in his household. This girl has been buying Czech crowns. Nominally they are worth 20.3 cents a crown. This week they were actually worth a cent and a third in American money. The few dollars which she was able to lay aside bought an astonishingly large number of crowns. She sent her money to her family in Europe.

"This bank and others have not favored the purchase of foreign exchange. They do not care to lend money for that purpose. Foreign exchange is undesirable security because trouble results if it depreciates in value. Furthermore, it is not a productive investment. The banks are more concerned to see productive foreign trade financed and developed. Money invested in foreign exchange earns nothing while it is idle. It gets no interest. It is buried. An extensive foreign exchange business has, however, grown up. I do not think that so many new agencies are in the field. On the other hand, organizations which had small departments have enlarged them to take care of the new business."

Similar reports were made by other banking corporations which specialize in foreign exchange and in foreign investments. Nowhere was any evidence of large speculation found. But the activities of the little fellow were everywhere commented upon. In all the foreign colonies men and women are buying the currency of the old countries and many Americans have followed suit. The effects of this speculation and investment may conceivably be far-reaching. Certainly American opinion concerning foreign affairs may be influenced. For the American who has turned his dollars into marks or francs or crowns has turned his thoughts into new channels. He no longer regards Europe as a land whose fortunes do not concern the United States.

Influence on World Politics.

It has been observed that the widely scattered French investments in old Russian securities have exercised important influences on the policy of the French Government toward Bolshevist Russia. The desire to retrieve some of the old loans, it has been said, has been so general that in framing its policies the French Foreign Office has in no small way been governed by the wishes of the holders of Russian bonds.

The present widespread tendency on the part of Americans to buy foreign money and foreign bonds would naturally have similar consequences. Men who have invested in German marks normally want to get their money back and to reap a speculative gain. They are accordingly interested in seeing Germany restored to prosperity. In a prosperous Germany the mark would rise in value. Also those who have German investments would like to see the indemnity fixed at as low a figure as possible. For that, too, would augment the value of their holdings.

Bearing on Peace Prospects.

It is thus altogether probable that the investments in German marks have awakened a new interest in the final peace settlement. Similar influences may affect public opinion as to other European countries. The currency of every one of the continental countries which participated in the war represents only a small fraction of its former value. Even the money of the neutral nations has sunk in the international scale. Nobody knows when, if ever, such money will be restored to its nominal worth. But everybody knows that the economic reconstruction of Europe would re-establish prosperity on the Continent and enhance the value of the currency of the various countries.

During the Civil War and immediately afterward the condition was reversed. American currency then sank in the scale. Toward the end of the war $2.85 in greenbacks was needed to buy one gold dollar. The Southern Confederacy currency went vastly lower. A dollar bill was the equivalent of 1 cent just before the collapse. Some Confederate bonds and money were bought in Europe. The Confederate dollar sank to just about the present level of the Russian ruble. The speculators who put their money in the South in the expectation that peace would bring profits lost all.

Irish Republican bonds are now roughly comparable to Confederate bonds in 1864. If the Southern States had succeeded in breaking away from the Union their bonds might have been paid. But no reasonable persons expected the United States to honor such loans. Similarly, if Sein Finn succeeds in severing Ireland from the British Empire, the Irish Republican bonds may be good. In this latter case, however, most of the American buyers were moved by an interest in Ireland and an antagonism to England rather than by any motive of gain.

Pure American Speculators.

In addition to the nationals of various countries who are buying foreign exchange, another group of simon-pure Americans are speculating. To them the purchase of marks and francs and crowns is a great adventure. They have no ties with the Old World save that which their speculation sets up. But the ownership of a Rumanian lei or a Czech crown breeds a sense of participating in world affairs. The strings of speculation lead far afield. The speculators indulge in dreams of wealth obtained as the result of national changes. Aside from the possible losses—which are minor because not much is involved—speculation by Americans of this type is an enlightening experience.

They are foreign exchange fans. They bet on a given nation just as they would have bet on a baseball team. They learn the names of political leaders and Generals. They discuss revolutions and counter-revolutions. Statesmen figure in their imaginations as do baseball players in the minds of small boys. A General takes the place of a "Babe."

Extent of the Operations.

How extensive is this revival of speculation in foreign exchange it is difficult to estimate accurately. The larger banks say that the total volume of foreign exchange dealings is not high at present. But at the same time they draw attention to the small buyers attracted from these different sources. These small buyers give color to the present market. It is not probable that many will reap the riches they seek. At least not the speculators who remain on this side of the Atlantic. Those larger fry who go across and change American money into European money and then buy European goods with the depreciated currency sometimes fare better. It has been noted that a few thousand American dollars will buy a palace in parts of Central Europe today. But even there prices readjust themselves to the new value of money. An American business man reported the other day that he had paid 5,000 marks for a day's ride in an automobile out into the country near Berlin. The charge translated was only about $75, possibly not high when the scarcity of automobiles in Germany is considered. But 5,000 marks was a middle class income in the old days. Germany is mending somewhat, but in other of the nearby countries conditions come close to those which obtained during the last days of the Southern Confederacy.

The new speculators are having an interesting time for their money. They may not gain financially, but they are getting a lot of experience. As a substitute for baseball or poker the game of foreign exchange is not a bad one.

Oculist: "Strange, you can't read the bottom line!"

REPLY FROM POLICE HEAD

Enright, Answering Critics, Says There Is No Crime Wave—"Resign? Not a Chance"

Police Commissioner R. E. Enright, under fire from many quarters, has complained of his inability to gain a fair hearing. THE TIMES asked George Creel to interview the Commissioner. Inasmuch as Mr. Creel was a Police Commissioner of Denver at one time in his career, and has at nearly all times been a storm centre himself, it was felt that he could make a full and fair presentation of Mr. Enright's case.

THE Police Commissioner of New York has a fighting jaw, a pair of clear, unwavering eyes and a gift of straightforward talk that makes interviewing a mere matter of faithful transcription. Here is his statement in his own behalf:

"If this gas attack was simply personal in its consequences, I would not care so much, but its poison envelops the whole police force and even the city itself. Ten thousand men are shamed as bad public servants, and New York is held up before the world as an outlaw rendezvous in which there is no respect or safety for life and property. It is the sort of advertising that keeps decent people away, even as it is an invitation to the lawless.

"What makes it worse is that these slanders are opposed by facts at every point. I say to you—and the records prove it—that our police force is loyal, efficient and effective, and that New York is second to no other city in its honest administration of law and the innate orderliness of its citizenship.

"Crime wave? There is none. It's a reportorial phrase without other base than reportorial imagination. Consider the thing for yourself. A terrible war has just shaken the foundations of civilized society, jarring millions of individuals loose from ancient standards. The business of killing and burning and ravaging cannot be carried on for four years without working changes in the old attitude toward life and property, and the whole country is feeling the effects of this demoralization. New York, too, bore almost the full weight of demobilization, industrial and military, and, in addition to our own population of some six million, the city has been the channel for a steady stream from trench and factory—thousands of men and boys, some with too much money, some with too little, and all in the first flush of release from discipline. We have also had to bear the heaviest strain of industrial readjustment. In 1919, for instance, we never had less than 500 strikes, often as many as 800, a majority of them passion breeders of the worst kind.

Complaint Against the Press.

"Yet what are the facts and figures? The year 1920—direct inheritor of every war violence and war disintegration—had a crime record well below the crime records of 1916 and 1917, two normal years. Few murders, fewer assaults, fewer burglaries! And did the press, either in 1916 or 1917, cry out against 'the unchecked wave of crime' and warn the world away from New York as a den of iniquity? Oh, no! In those years there was not a Mayor to be hounded nor a Police Commissioner to be discredited.

"There is crime, to be sure, but not in excess of the proportion normal to a city of this size. And as thoroughly and quickly as at any other time in municipal history, criminals are being apprehended. One unsolved murder mystery provokes columns of indignant editorials, but scarce a news item records the scores of successful solutions.

"There is another comparison that can be made in fairness. When I took office in January, 1918, following an administration that was presumed to have left the city chemically pure, I found forty-three houses of assignation in full blast, and Broadway and its side streets serving as regular trade routes for roving bands of prostitutes. Nine racing bureaus were in active operation, each serving a huge clientele of fools and blacklegs, and gambling was a flourishing industry both in the high places and the low.

"I say that these evil conditions have been wiped out. New York, for its size, is today the cleanest and safest city in the world. I challenge any one to circumstantial disproof of this assertion. Let those who have been so glib with their general charges and vague slanders come forward with one single case of protected vice or gambling. There is not a single page in my whole official record that I am not willing to lay on the table before any legal or responsible body. No one can make a specific accusation that I am not willing to answer in the open. But although this attack has been going on for months, not a direct charge of specific wrongdoing or corruption has been made against me, nor can I force my enemies to quit waving their blanket indictment and get down to brass tacks.

Police Force Praised.

"Instead of shaming it, New York ought to be proud of its police force. There are scamps on it, and sluggards and tricksters, but man for man they stack up against any body of men in the world for loyalty and devotion. Look at the record again! Less crime in 1920 than in 1916 and 1917. Yet there has not been an addition to the force since 1913. Since that time the city has grown a million, and a World War has manufactured lawlessness, but the same police force that kept the peace in 1913 is called upon to meet the trebled task of today. New York contains 314 square miles, with 3,514 miles of streets, and when our men are divided into the eight-hour shifts demanded by law, it will be seen that about 2,000 men must cover this vast area. No other world metropolis operates with so small a force. London, with police problems far less difficult than ours, has 24,000 policemen. We have 16,500.

"Yet, in spite of the record that proves splendid loyalty, a former police official has not scrupled to charge that the entire force is 'on strike' against me. There's a fine example of unreasoning malice. It was not so long ago that the whole country rose in indignation against the Boston police strike, and yet New York is asked to believe that its 10,000 uniformed guardians are now betraying their trust for no larger reason than hatred of me.

"It would be absurd, were it not so malignant! Police Commissioners come and go—some are liked and some disliked—but out of a lifetime of experience, I can say that there was never a time when the policemen of New York laid down on the job. Not even the army or the navy has greater traditions of devotion. What does take the heart out of them is the newspaper attack that paints them as crooks or loafers.

"In the general mind, the Police Department is associated only with the suppression of crime. As a matter of fact, one might say that this has become almost the least of its duties. We are right arm of the Health Department, of the Fire Department, of the Street Cleaning Department and of the Election Department. It is the Police Department that examines the steam boilers of the city, it is the Police Department that must handle all parades, and it is the Police Department that has entire charge of traffic, a problem that has become of fundamental importance, and which today requires 1,300 men of the 16,500 members of the force. Policemen, in truth, are the clerks and errand boys of almost every other branch of the City Government, and in addition to this, social workers want them to take on other duties ranging from food conservation to wet nursing. It's a wonder to heaven that we get along as well as we do.

"Trouble with the office of the District Attorney? There is none as far as I am concerned. I have never refused aid to Mr. Swann nor failed to cooperate with his office to the full extent of my power. What I will not do, however, is to give my power of attorney to any other official, nor will I turn over the police for purposes of political huckstering. Back in May, 1918, Assistant District Attorney Smith, who boasts that his genius for publicity placed Mr. Whitman in the Governor's chair, commenced the practice of commandeering the police force for a series of Saturday night raids. Galloping into the police station, heavily flanked by reporters, he would strip the place of all available men, and then hurl himself upon the lesser Broadway restaurants, arresting the patrons joyously and indiscriminately. In the course of a few months, more than fifteen hundred persons were arrested, dragged out, ridden through the streets in patrol wagons and even locked up in cells. Yet not one of this large number ever had a charge made against him, and not one ever faced a magistrate.

"The whole thing seemed outrageous to me. Not only was it demoralizing the police force, and turning station houses into bedlams, but there was also the utter disregard of the very civil rights that we were presumed to protect. I put an end to the business and as long as I am Police Commissioner there will be no more of these hullabaloo dragnets.

Reduction of Costigan.

"Why did I take Costigan away from the Vice Squad and reduce him from Inspector to Captain? For the very reason that he wasn't making good. You see, when I took office there was a general belief that my appointment was merely temporary, and some men, Costigan chief among them, felt that no particular loyalty need be given me. He was, and had been, in charge of Vice Squad No. 1, operating in Manhattan, the Bronx and Richmond. Vice Squad No. 2, over in Brooklyn and Queens, was under Inspector McDonald. When I found that houses of assignation, gambling rooms and racing exchanges were in full blast, I gave orders to Costigan to clean up and clean up hard and quick. In June I called attention officially to his failure. Again in July I pointed out that he and his squad were laying down on the job, and stated flatly that I did not mean to stand for it. I repeated these rebukes and warnings in August, but Costigan still persisted in his attitude of contemptuous indifference, seeming to feel that his press friendships protected him from punishment. In October I relieved him from duty, consolidated the two squads under Inspector McDonald, and from the start we got results. That is the only thing I am after.

"My five Special Deputy Commissioners? All right; let's consider them. For years press and people have been denouncing 'politicians' and begging for 'business men.' I thought it a good idea myself, and so I looked the whole city over and picked out the five biggest executives I could get. Each man took a desk and accepted a distinct set of duties. Dr. John A. Harriss specialized on traffic. Allan A. Ryan took over our co-operation with the Federal Government in the matter of national defense. Edward A. Guggenheim devoted his large experience to the supervision of the Bronx and intricate problems of the Pensions Committee. John M. Shaw took charge of the Borough of Richmond and two committees. Rodman Wanamaker assumed direction of the Police Reserves. General T. Coleman du Pont took hold of the Borough of Queens and Ways and Means Committee, and Dr. Carleton Simon, one of America's foremost alienists, was placed in charge of the Department of Narcotic Drug Control. Had I employed these men in the open market a half million yearly would have been the minimum bill.

"My trouble with the press? Well,

PHILIPPINES AND FREEDOM

A Review of the Rapid Progress Which Causes Their Hope for Early Independence

As secretary to the Governor General of the Philippines in 1913 and later as Commissioner of Public Utilities, the author of this article traveled much over the islands under Spanish sovereignty. He met Rizal, the father of the revolution—"the Malay George Washington," as it were. Previously he had been a war correspondent with the American Army during the insurrection of 1900 and 1901.

The ensuing review and analysis of the Philippine situation has been written in view of the assumption that Congress will soon take up the question of the islands' independence.

By STEPHEN BONSAL.

It was an unwelcome experiment and a supreme test to which the American people were suddenly subjected when through the unavoidable vicissitudes of the war with Spain the Philippine problem passed into our hands for solution. We suddenly became responsible before civilization for the well being and the orderly behavior of some eight or ten millions of people of divers Malay races, whose island home lay across the Pacific, half way around the world.

We might very well have shirked the responsibility. We might very well have passed the problem on to more experienced or to more eager hands. Certainly at this juncture England was receptive and Germany was eager to take over the islands. Many leading Americans thought the naval battle in the Bay and the capture of Manila were merely military incidents of a struggle whose lasting results might well, and with propriety, have been confined to the American Continent, but a great American occupied the post of Chief Magistrate and he thought differently. He endeavored to make terms with the Philippine patriots who, misled and misinformed, continued to fight against the American intervening forces with even greater obstinacy than they had shown in their struggle against Spanish domination.

Every effort was made by President McKinley to obtain light on an obscure situation. Experts were listened to, and those who confessedly were not experts were called in. Even I, who had spent but a few weeks in the Philippines, four years before, was summoned from New York by Postmaster General Gary of Maryland, taken to the White House and closely interrogated for something over an hour. A few days later President McKinley dispatched to the islands a commission composed of eminent men to handle on the ground and in his stead the difficult situation that had developed. He impressed upon them the fact that theirs was a "liberating mission," and to his instructions in this sense he insisted they should remain undeviatingly true.

The Obligation Incurred.

When this mission entered Philippine waters, two great milestones in modern history had been passed. America and American influence were no longer confined to the Western Continent. The second world transformation, and, if possible, of still greater importance was the fact that a great democratic power had accepted colonial responsibility. Spain and Portugal had secured and maintained lodgment along the east coast of Asia for centuries, France, England and Russia for decades, and now the great democratic power of the West had accepted responsibility for deplorable conditions it was in nowise responsible for.

It is the purpose of this article to disclose how this responsibility has been lived up to, and due justice will be done, in so far as space permits, to all who have participated in this pioneering job of democracy operating upon a subtle people of what was once the immutable East.

Under the conditions of distrust that not unnaturally prevailed at first, progress in the pacification of the islands was slow, and the first fruits of the confidence which we reposed, or thought we reposed, in the Malay were not always encouraging. Still, strongly believing that the basic principle of our action was sound and just, we continued to improve conditions in the Philippines and to aid those Filipinos who showed capacity and an inclination to take their part in founding a stable Government, although it was imposed by strangers.

The American plan, the way we tackled the job that devolved upon us when we destroyed Spanish power in the East Indies as we did in the West Indies, and when, in our judgment, the native population was absolutely lacking in the indispensable prerequisites of self-government, was the subject of cynical amusement to many European onlookers and of melancholy predictions to not a few of our own people. The old China "hand" and the Hongkong and Shanghai merchants made many jokes at the expense of our "shoe men." Their point of view should not be entirely forgotten. Let me recall it now, not in malice but in justice.

Europe Criticised Us.

It was held by the critics of American ignorance that Malays should never be permitted to wear shoes. This was axiomatic. Straw sandals, perhaps, were permissible, but, on the whole, it was better for them to go barefooted, since they were destined to remain the hewers of wood and the drawers of water for the commercial aristocracy of the treaty ports, where, under treaties negotiated at the cannon's mouth, the white man, the stranger, occupied a position of unrestrained power and supremacy. And, of course, our talk of schools and education, even though primary or merely industrial, for our new wards was to these people political anathema.

Undeterred by these croaking prophecies, and not convinced by the stories so generally current as to the innate depravity of the natives, the American soldier and sailor, our administrators, our policemen, our sanitarians, and, above all, our school teachers kept right on upon their appointed tasks, strong in the belief, however heretical it sounded to Hongkong, that, outside of superficial differences, men were all about the same and equally responsive to a changed environment. Benefits, it was thought, would not be forgotten, but the idea prevailed that in any event what was done was in the line of duty, and that it was done, not in the expectation of gratitude, but because it was right.

"When they know that we are out here to do only what is right and what is best for them, all opposition will cease," was the prophetic remark a member of the second liberating commission made to me on my second visit to the islands in 1901. He was right, eternally right, although transitory appearances were against him. None of the Western powers that had come to the East had come in a liberating spirit, and many of the Filipinos did not believe in the sincerity of our altruistic policy.

To maintain our educational occupation at this time, and for several years afterward, required an army of nearly 100,000 men, and our expenditures ran into untold and uncounted millions.

Despite critics at home, who maintained, and with truth, that for half this money we could endow the United States with the greatest system of roads and the greatest network of waterways and inland communication the world had ever seen or even dreamed of, we persisted in our plan of aiding the Filipinos to a self-government of a stable character, and from that day until now this policy, so often decried at home and abroad, has been pursued. At times it has been pushed with greater insistence that at others, and at times with greater ability and a better understanding of the problems involved that at others, but never once for a moment has it been relaxed, and now the tale—the profit-and-loss account of the first great experiment in an altruistic national uplift—lies before us as an open book.

It is regrettable, but not strange, that this book should be read more carefully, with more appreciation and understanding abroad than it is at home with us. Practically the fate of every occupied territory and the destiny of every subject race in the world has become involved in the outcome of the experiment and the great venture which was entered upon by President McKinley's liberating mission in January, 1899. There is comfort in the thought that, turbulent as is the world today, or many important districts of it, perhaps nowhere is a more formidable problem presented for solution than that which confronted the Americans whom we sent across the Pacific in that memorable year. In those days the Philippine Islands, as a result of a medieval Government, a tactless Spanish occupation, an American invasion that was misunderstood and a widespread revolution against all imposed authority, presented a fairly true picture of political chaos.

Education Advanced.

While on paper there did exist in the days of Spanish sovereignty a pretentious educational plan, in practice public education adequate to the needs of the people had not been attempted before the American occupation. There were, of course, educated men in the Philippines. Indeed, quite a number of very highly educated men. The educational work of the friars had brought excellent results in some directions. Indeed, the Dominican University of San Tomas was older than Harvard, and we availed ourselves of what the Spaniards had done in a larger measure than they had cared to do themselves. Within twelve months of the beginning of the American occupation, three Philippine-born graduates of this university had been nominated to full membership and power in the liberating commission. England has occupied British India for two centuries and only recently has she taken the step that we took in the first year of our responsibility. Still, after all is said and done, it must be admitted that when we came to the islands education was the good fortune of a favored few. Our task was to make it the right and privilege of all.

It is a laborious effort and yet one of pressing timeliness to collate the official and authorized utterances of those who, under authority delegated to them by the people of the United States, have been in responsible control of the Philippine situation for the last twenty-two years. But this survey has a distinct advantage over many other historical researches equally laborious. It does not unearth anything that you would conceal. It brings to light nothing that should not make every American flush with pride. It is the simple story of a great trusteeship conscientiously performed.

Now, however, the moment has come for a change in the continuity of our policy of Philippine development, of endowing a Malay people with democratic institutions. One step justified by results has led to another that is also justified by its results. And now, after the apprenticeship of a quarter of a century, unless we are false to our bond, the Philippines must be cast loose, or reasons—of which none, however, is apparent—must be given in justification of further delay. To chart out wisely our future course, we should look up the record of the past and study the log book of our voyage of political discovery from the day we left our distant point of departure in the Western World and sailed into the Eastern seas.

The dilemma of Mr. McKinley was not wholly unlike that by which Mr. Wilson was confronted at Versailles. Mr. McKinley had declared that it was a sin against civilization to permit Cuba to be terrorized and Cubans to be starved to death. The necessity of breaking Spanish power wherever we found it standing intact brought us to the Philippines, and there we were confronted with a momentous task, an unescapable decision. Should we permit Spain to do in Asia what we had prevented her from doing in America? This was Mr. McKinley's problem. Mr. Wilson's dilemma was, "Are we pledged only to make Alsace and Lorraine free and safe for democracy, or does our war-ending-war slogan apply to all peoples who, though capable of standing alone, are held down under foreign yoke?"

Their Freedom Promised.

As the bond approaches maturity, let us scan narrowly the terms of our national obligation. I mean, of course, the specific words that were used, quite apart from the general promise of self-government and representative institutions that our flag has ever stood for, wherever unfurled.

It was finely put at the very beginning, when President McKinley sent out his first mission to compose the situation resulting from the destruction of Spanish supremacy by Dewey's fleet and the want of confidence that prevailed in many quarters that the Philippine insurgents would be able to establish a democratic stable form of government, although this was admittedly their aspiration. He then expressed the hope in January, 1899, that the Commissioners would be received as bearers of "the richest blessings of a liberating rather than a conquering nation." Later he said, "The Philippines are ours, not to exploit but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government. This is the path of duty which we must follow or be recreant to a mighty trust committed to us."

Commenting upon the attacks that were made from many quarters on his publicly announced policy of the Philippines for the Filipinos, Mr. Taft, while Governor General, said in December, 1903: "This principle (the Philippines for the Filipinos) makes up the web and the woof of the policy of the United States with respect to these islands, as it has been authoritatively declared by the Presidents of the United States. For President Roosevelt has followed sedulously the policy of President McKinley and, by the interpretation of the supreme popular will, the Congress of the United States." And later in the same statement he pointed out what so many critics of Philippine policy are inclined to overlook: "The actions of the President and the instructions issued by him have by an act of Congress been expressly approved." And later he added: "I think I have demonstrated by what I have quoted and the instances that I have cited that the doctrine 'the Philippines for the Filipinos' is one which the honor of the United States requires it to enforce throughout these islands; not only was it promised to the Filipinos when the Americans came, after they had been here, during the insurrection and at its close, but I do not think it too much to say that the reiteration of the promise, as shown in legislation carrying out these principles, had much to do with bringing about the present tranquillity in these islands."

Mr. Taft's Assurances.

And again, when the insurrection had been to all intents and purposes suppressed and law and order were generally restored, Governor General Taft made the following sweeping statement: "Now what has produced the present tranquillity? I say without hesitation that the chief element today is the confidence which the conservative people of the islands have in the promises of the United States to make the welfare of the Filipinos its chief purpose in remaining here, to assist them sincerely in learning the secret of self-government by gradually enlarging their political power."

These are, indeed, notable landmarks from which we should not deviate, but from which we should draw inspiration for our future course.

In 1906 President Roosevelt said: "We are constantly increasing the measure of liberty accorded the islanders, and, if conditions warrant, next Spring we shall take a great step forward in testing their capacity for self-government by summoning the first Filipino Assembly." And in 1908, after the session of the Legislature had closed, President Roosevelt said in his message:

"Hitherto this Philippine Legislature has acted with moderation and self-restraint and has seemed in a practical fashion to realize the eternal truth that there must always be government, and that the only way in which any body of individuals can escape the necessity of being governed by outsiders is to show that they are able to restrain themselves, to keep down wrongdoing and disorder.

"The Filipino people, through their officials, are making real steps in the direction of self-government. I hope and believe that these steps mark the beginning of a course which will continue until the Filipinos become fit to decide for themselves whether they desire to be an independent nation. We cannot give them self-government save in the sense of governing them so that gradually they may, if they are able, learn to govern themselves."

And, in conclusion, he added: "I trust that within a generation the time will arrive when the Filipinos can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent or to continue under the protection of a strong and disinterested power."

When Mr. Taft, then Secretary of War, traveled through the islands and in October, 1907, opened the session of the First Philippine Assembly in person, he said: "The avowed policy of administration under these two Presidents has been to fit the people themselves to maintain a stable and well-ordered government. * * * As this policy of extending control continues, it must logically reduce and finally end the sovereignty of the United States in the islands, unless it shall seem wise to the American and Filipino people, on account of mutually beneficial trade relations, and possible advantage to the islands in their foreign relations, that the bond shall not be completely severed."

Training for Self-Government.

In his special report to the President relating his experiences in the islands upon this memorable journey, Mr. Taft wrote: "The conditions in the islands today vindicate and justify that policy. It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion, as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater, the ultimate independence of the islands, although, of course, if both the United States and the islands were to conclude, after complete self-government were possible, that it would be mutually beneficial to continue a governmental relation between them like that between England and Australia, there would be nothing inconsistent with the present policy in such a result." And, in conclusion, the Secretary of War and future President added, "I have an abiding conviction that the Filipino people are capable of being taught self-government."

In his Presidential message of December, 1912, Mr. Taft urged upon Congress changes in policy. "We should endeavor to secure for the Filipinos economic independence," he said, "and fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence." And when the Democratic platform of 1912 contained a promise "to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as soon as a stable government can be established," President Taft in an official utterance asserted that this was "an affirmation of policy only slightly differing from that repeatedly announced by this [his own] and preceding Republican Administrations."

For some years now, in fact since the opening of the Legislature in 1907, the

PROFIT TAXED AS INCOME

Right to Levy on Gain From Sale of Capital Assets Is Now Questioned in Courts

By PHILIP KATES.

THE decision of the District Court of Connecticut in Brewster v. Walsh, on Dec. 16, 1920, does not as yet seem to be fully understood as to its effect on the income tax laws. Should the Supreme Court of the United States take the view of Judge Thomas, then there must be a recasting of the revenue laws, for under the term "income," as defined in that decision, the Government cannot possibly collect sufficient tax to run the Government, much less provide the necessary interest and sinking fund for the outstanding bonds.

Congress, in the income tax acts, has defined income, in effect, as all profits, from whatever source arising, and has, in many instances, specifically taxed the profits arising from the sale of capital assets, as well as profits arising from the conduct of a business.

The opinion in Brewster v. Walsh, when pursued to its logical conclusion, holds that profits arising from the sale of capital assets are not taxable income; and the reasoning of the court and the authorities cited almost result in the further conclusion that the profits arising from the conduct of a business are not taxable income.

This decision does not mean that Congress cannot tax such profits. In the Corporation Tax act of 1909 it imposed a tax on the conduct of business by corporations, and measured that tax by its net income, and in Section 38 of the act of 1909 defined what it meant by net income for the purpose of the tax. This tax was sustained by the Supreme Court in Stratton v. Howbert, and the power of Congress to define income was also sustained, but the law was sustained because the tax was not an income tax, Justice Pitney said: "As to what should be deemed 'income' within the meaning of Section 38, it of course need not be such an income as would have been taxable as such, for at that time (the Sixteenth Amendment not having been as yet ratified) income was not taxable as such by Congress without apportionment according to population, and this tax was not so apportioned."

Judge Pitney's Decision.

The tax was on the privilege of doing business, and this tax was sustained because it was an excise and not an income tax. The amount of the tax was measured by the income, and this income was defined by Congress as the total amount of gross income received from all sources, less expenses, losses and depreciation. The meaning of the word income, in that act, was the income received from transacting business, and therefore taxable under an excise tax law; but income as used in the Corporation Tax act was not used in the sense of income which would be taxable under an income tax act. Justice Pitney made this plain in discussing the mining business, which was under consideration in that case (Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U. S. 399.) He said: "The sale outright of a mining property might be fairly described as a mere conversion of the capital from land into money."

But he held that the mining of ore was a business, and that on the profits arising from the sale of ore, in the business of mining, the tax could be applied, because it was a tax on the privilege of transacting business, and therefore an excise tax; and it was not a tax on income, and therefore not an income tax, which could not have validly been imposed in 1909 without apportionment.

The discussion of the effect of depletion and depreciation in that case does not apply to the income tax acts, because, as Justice Pitney says, the act under consideration was a tax on the business and not an income tax.

If the same reasoning applied to the income tax acts, then the sale of a capital asset would not result in taxable income, no matter how great the profits arising, because, as Justice Pitney said, the outright sale of a mining property is a capital conversion.

The Stratton case, therefore, does not apply to the income tax acts, and the discussion of the Supreme Court in that case furnishes no rule for determining income under an income tax law.

In the income tax cases, 158 U. S. 601, the Supreme Court through Chief Justice Fuller said: "The power to tax real and personal property, and the income from both, there being an apportionment, is conceded." And the court held the income tax unconstitutional as being a direct tax, without apportionment; and the Sixteenth Amendment (the income tax amendment) was adopted and ratified in 1913, to remove the necessity for apportionment of taxes on incomes. As Mr. Justice Vandeventer said in the case of Evans v. Gora, decided June 21, 1920, the Sixteenth Amendment did nothing but removes the bar as to apportionment. It did not enlarge the taxing power of Congress.

What Is Income?

The question decided in Brewster v. Walsh, on Dec. 16, by the District Court in Connecticut, is, "What is income, which is taxable by the Sixteenth Amendment?" The amendment did not remove the bar as to taxing real and personal property without apportionment. Congress always could, and can now, tax all the real and personal property in the United States, but it must apportion the tax. But it may now, since 1913, levy an income tax without apportionment; and it may levy an excise tax without apportionment. But it cannot levy a direct tax without apportionment except on income.

Since the adoption of the Sixteenth Amendment, we may restate Justice Fuller's statement in the income tax case: "The power to tax real and personal estate, and the income from both, without apportionment is conceded." That is the sum total of the effect of the Sixteenth Amendment.

Now, what is income, from real and personal property, which may be taxed, without apportionment?

Mr. Justice Pitney, in the corporation tax case (Stratton's Independence vs. Howbert) stated that the sale of a mining property was merely a capital conversion, and not income. Therefore, the sale of a lease, or a producing oil property, or any other capital asset, would under that statement, produce no taxable income. It was even admitted that such a sale would not produce an income which would be used as the basis for computing an excise tax, under the act of 1909.

The gradual disposition of the ore by a mining company (and the same is true of an oil company, or a timber company) was subject to the tax, as an excise tax on the privilege of transacting business in a corporate capacity. It was not a tax on the profits derived from the sale of the ore; but a tax on the privilege of transacting business, the tax being measured by the profits. The distinction may appear to be a fine distinction, but it is a real distinction, and formed the basis of the decision of the Supreme Court in that case.

Now, it will be admitted that the present income taxes are not excise taxes, such as the tax of 1909. They are direct income taxes and they are limited to income, as such. They cannot be validly imposed on property, nor on the transaction of business. If a tax is to be imposed on business it must be an excise tax; if on property it must be apportioned between the States according to population.

Springer vs. U. S. 102, U. S 586, has been relied on as establishing the right of Congress to class earnings as income. But the Supreme Court in the income tax cases did not so understand that case. Chief Justice Fuller, in commenting on the Springer case, said, "While this language (in the Springer case) is broad enough to cover the interest as well as the professional earnings, the case would have been more significant as a precedent if the distinction had been brought out in the report and commented on in arriving at judgment, for a tax on professional receipts might be treated as an excise or duty, and therefore indirect, when a tax on the income of personalty might be held to be direct."

So that, so far as the Supreme Court has spoken, it treats a tax on earnings as subject to an excise or duty tax, but not to a direct tax; but treats a tax on the income of personalty as a direct tax; and in the income tax case itself makes the distinction between income and earnings. The tax on income, as such, being direct; and therefore not to be levied without apportionment; but a tax on earnings being an excise, might be levied without apportionment.

The only case decided by the Supreme Court under an income tax law, which has passed on profits from the sale of property as being taxable or not under an income tax law, is the case of Gray vs. Darlington, 15 Wall 63, and that case held that the profit on the sale of bonds, which had been held for four years, was not taxable income under the act of 1867, which taxed all gains, profits or income made during the year preceding that in which the tax is levied, just as do the acts passed since the adoption of the Sixteenth Amendment.

And the reasoning of Justice Pitney in Macomber vs. Eisner (the stock dividend case) and of Justice Vandeventer in Gore vs. Evans (which exempted the salaries of the Federal Judges) would lead logically to the decision in the Brewster case; namely, that the income tax amendment merely removed the bar of apportionment as to a tax on income. It did not give Congress any greater power than it had before. It did not give Congress the right to define as income that which is properly a tax on property, which must be apportioned; or a tax on earnings, or the transaction of business which must be under the form of an excise tax.

So, if any profits or gains are not income, Congress cannot by definition bring them within the income tax.

Justice Pitney in construing the corporation tax of 1909 admitted that the sale of a capital asset would not produce taxable income, even when that income was used as a measure of fixing an excise tax. And further held that a tax on business must be an excise tax.

In the stock dividend case Justice Pitney said that increases in value did not represent a taxable income or gain; at least until reduced to money.

In the Federal Judges' salary case Justice Vandeventer said that the Sixteenth Amendment did not in any manner enlarge the powers of Congress.

The Main Question.

And now applying these decisions and taking a definition of income as given to the word by the various courts, being the definition it had at the time of the adoption of the Sixteenth Amendment, the Federal Court in Connecticut has ruled that no capital accretion, whether in the form of property, or when reduced to money, is income. No profits arising from the sale of a capital asset produce taxable income. The gradual depletion of capital through mining, whether ore or oil, was subject to the tax of 1909 as a tax on a business.

And this, as any other business, may be subject to an excise tax.

But, until the Supreme Court of the United States has finally passed on Brewster vs. Walsh, it must remain an open question whether Congress can impose an income tax, which is a direct tax, on profits arising from trades and business; or whether it must reach such profits through an excise tax, such as a sales tax would be.

And it must further remain an open question whether under the guise of an income tax, Congress can impose a direct tax on the profits from the sale of a capital asset, whether the sale be in lump or by gradual depletion, without apportioning such tax among the States according to population.

TIDE OF IMMIGRATION IN 100 YEARS

IF history repeats itself, this chart of the 30,000,000 immigrants who have entered the United States in the last century may be taken to indicate that the immigration problem, for the next few years at any rate, will solve itself. The chart is from Frank Julian Warne's book of charts and is part of an article he has contributed to a symposium on immigration just published in the annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

The illustration was constructed from statistics of the United States Bureau of Immigration. It is particularly timely just now, when general unemployment is increasing and the country is in the grip of an industrial depression. The author has used it to illustrate his contention that immigration always shows a sharp falling off immediately after periods of business stagnation.

"By studying the yearly figures in the table of the accompanying chart and relating them to events of industrial or economic history," says Mr. Warne, "we are able to understand what is probably the most significant of all the operating forces or influences at work behind this great movement of population across the Atlantic. For illustration, the number of immigrant arrivals strikingly decreased from nearly 482,000 in 1854 to 200,877 the following year, a decrease of more than one-half. This falling off reflected the effects of the greatest financial panic ever experienced in the history of the United States up to that time.

"The ensuing industrial depression was followed closely by the Civil War, and it was not until 1873 that the yearly inflow again reached as large a volume, the number being nearly 460,000. The year 1873 marks another panic, and a striking decrease the following years in the number of alien arrivals is again recorded. Beginning in the early '80s and accompanying increasing prosperity in all of our industries, the volume of immigration steadily increased until this tendency was interrupted by the panic of 1893. The financial disturbance in this country in 1907 was similarly followed by a striking decrease in immigration.

"The close relation between industrial depression and decrease in immigration on the one hand and industrial prosperity and increase in immigration on the other is the economic explanation of the periodic waves of immigration that have washed our shores since 1820, and particularly so in more recent years. It points unmistakably to the economic characteristics of this great movement of population and to the fact that by far the greater part of it is due to the industrial demand in the United States for labor."

JUNKERDOM, NEW STYLE

Reventlow, the Fire Eater, Favors Combination of Monarchy and Soviet for Germany

By CHARLES J. ROSEBAULT.

I HAVE never had the honor of meeting the Count zu Reventlow, that distinguished Menschenfresser of the haughty days of the German Empire, whose vehement articles in the Junkers' Beloved, alias the Deutsche Zeitung, indicated clearly that the breakfast of his choice would have been an assortment of Allies, done to a turn. That was, of course, until the Americans came into the game and the talk of an accentuated submarine warfare found some opponents within the very walls of Kultur. After that Americans à la fourchette would doubtless have been triple-starred on his menu.

But, if I have not seen the great man, I have at least had the presumption to imagine his appearance. There are, it must be understood, various kinds of Junkers, all of whom are entitled to be considered the genuine article. Ibáñez portrayed one sort in "The Four Horsemen" who had a penchant for wearing silken kimonos, while he played the piano with exaggerated sentiment. Max Harden raised quite a rumpus in exposing the doings of that type within the sacred circles of the Court. Then there is the hardshell variety that harks back to Thor, rolls its R's like bits of thunder, stamps its mighty feet and snaps its flinty jaws—to the eternal awe of women and children. Hindenburg is an excellent physical exponent of this branch of Junkerdom, although he seems to have less wood in the headpiece than most of them. Finally, there is the hero of the Fraulein, corseted, faultless in dress and manner—according to German standards—who strides through the universe in haughty disdain of all outside his class, pronouncing in accents peculiar to himself the infallible judgments of one who knows all things.

It is in this latter category that I would place zu Reventlow. I can almost see his lordship in one of the aristocratic drawing rooms of Berlin, seated at one end of the omnipresent sofa, his worshipful hostess at the other end. He looks condescendingly upon her as he throws to her inferior intelligence a few gems of thought. His upturned mustache has been drilled to the particular slant which distinguishes a superman from a person. His clothes fit perfectly, that is, a bit snugly to the immaculate Prussian figure. But it is in his accent, the final criterion of Kultur, derived from omniscience and the pure Prussian breeding, that the demi-god is revealed. Useless to attempt to define what is beyond the comprehension of ordinary mortals. Sufficient to say that this accent is to the Junker what the thirty-third degree is to the Masonic order. That and the languid manner which masks the steel-armored soul.

Junkers' Evil Days.

I may be mistaken, of course. A personality like that of Ernst zu Reventlow must have some marked characteristics which would cause a deviation from any type. Possibly their existence would explain the remarkable circumstance that he was not one of the spokesmen at the great gathering of the clans at Hanover recently, when the fire-consuming Count Westarp, leader of the Irreconcilables in Parliament, proclaimed to the world that the Old Order was still to be reckoned with. Apparently there is not the former accord between zu Reventlow and his fellows. He is no longer the voice of the Deutsche Zeitung, which may explain why it seemed for a time as though his light had disappeared under the proverbial bushel; but recently it reappeared as brilliant as ever, shining through the columns of his own journal, Der Reichswart, in a typical screech, purporting to reveal a conspiracy between this Government and the Entente against the independence of Mexico. In the best days of the Empire Junker imagination and spite evolved nothing finer.

But it is in an entirely different character that the Count now challenges attention—one which would induce an innocent reader of his words to conclude that he had really broken with his allies of the past and cast himself for a new rôle which would carry him far from the paths they once trod together. Of course, now that the Junkers have fallen upon evil days it would not be surprising to find them falling out over their failure to keep the spoils which once were theirs; but one must proceed carefully in forming judgments of individuals so far removed from the rest of humanity as the one-time masters of Germany, and when zu Reventlow digs at the Kaiser and his entourage it is well to put on one's specs and weigh carefully each one of his utterances.

It is in a recent issue of the Süddeutsche Monatchefte that he makes his bow as a critic of his old companions. This periodical, one of the weightiest and most independent of German publications, gives up the greater part of this issue to his pronouncement, and stars it in big black letters on the cover. "Non-Partisan Thoughts" is his title, and there is no suggestion of blood or thunder—nor even sarcasm—in his manner. Rather, were his past unknown, one might believe that here was some old philosopher who had weighed carefully the pros and cons before setting down a single phrase.

Monarch Rallying Centre.

At the very outset he takes issue with Westarp and his fire eaters. What once was in Germany will never return as it was. One cannot step twice into the same stream, said the wise Greek, which is the author's way of asserting that the Empire and the Emperor cannot come back. He goes further and says that the monarchists are and have been wasting valuable time in pursuing the theory that after the Republic a restoration of the old Empire was feasible. Moreover, they have hurt themselves and the monarchical cause.

He says frankly that he is convinced that the monarchical form of government is the only one adapted to the German people. Other nations may get along with a President—the French, for instance, with their strong idea of nationalism—but the Germans lack a national backbone and need one that is constant. Such is the monarch, always the rallying centre, always drawing together the strength of the nation. But monarchies, whose accepted leaders discredit themselves as did those of Germany in the Fall of 1918, cannot be put back on their feet like upset chairs. The ineradicable memory of the tumble would forever preclude the return of the old faith. The halo has departed forever. The princes were themselves at fault. They did not know how to be leaders. The All-Highest is not spared. In the same breath in which he declares the Government as it was the nearest possible approach to perfection, its faults such as could have been remedied without affecting foundation or structure, he asserts that "the great errors of the years before the war were not attributable to the monarchy, as such; they were due, in great measure, to the monarch himself."

The political parties failed likewise to function as they might have within their powers. The Right—party of the Junkers—failed in statesmanship—in ability to show progress within constitutional limits. The radicals of the Left regarded as progress only what made for destruction. They spoke of synthesis but proceeded as analysts. Fundamentally, says zu Reventlow with a grimness true to type, the most successful analyst is Death!

Whatever we Americans think about the advocacy of monarchies in these days, there is unquestionably divided opinion in Europe and, more especially in Germany, where the great days of the empire appear effulgently against the sombre background of present misery. Though the Junkers be anathema in wide circles, the hungry German of the middle and lower classes, tightening his belt and shivering against his empty procelain stove, has visions of the comfort and plenty of the days of his serfdom. This is the greatest danger of the democracy, and is recognized by liberal minds as threatening a turn to Bolshevism or to reaction, according as the strong man appears in the one camp or the other.

Looking for Strong Man.

That a strong man may appear is the prayer of each of the many parties which shriek for a hearing. Our author quotes a Frenchman as writing in 1918: "History is to politics what the hospital is to the physician, and history says that the big soft German mass never was able to stand erect without a support in the form of a man with a heart of bronze. The Germany of Wallenstein and Frederick II. accomplished the superhuman; that of Frederick William III. fell on its knees and cheered the conquering French as they entered Berlin." Peering from the background of zu Reventlow's comments is a strong intimation that the Junkers had better trim ship by throwing overboard the incompetents who ran it on the rocks when last they had the wheel and look about for a new helmsman before their rivals can pick the right man.

The methods proposed by Westarp and his fellows are condemned out of hand. Why fool any longer with the old ideals when they have proven but broken reeds? One must be clever in these days of the proletariat and devise something new. So long as we accomplish our main purpose, the road we travel is of little consequence. The thoughts of yesterday are as dead as the Pharaohs. We must show ourselves able to seize upon the latest mental gymnastics of the political theorists and develop them to our advantage. Of course, zu Reventlow does not say any of this, but it may be picked out of his discourse without straining the context.

And he has himself discovered the path of least resistance. It is no less than a combination of the monarchy and the Soviet!

One can imagine the horror with which this suggestion was received by Junkerdom. The power and influence of some words cannot be appraised easily, and to the privileged of all countries there must be an evil connotation in soviet. It must necessarily recall the plight of the sacrosanct in Russia, once the very citadel of privilege. Nervous barons and counts might easily be moved by it to unpleasant dreams. Cousins in Budapest have had more than a taste of the terror, and in Munich and other cities of the Fatherland itself there have been wild days and nights. And now ons of their very own talks of uniting with king-killers and the dregs of the gutter!

No Monarchy by Force.

But zu Reventlow develops his thought without any trace of heat or excitement, patiently and lengthily, as becomes a thorough and efficient German philosopher enunciating non-partisan politics—with monarchical predilections. Any imaginable form of monarchy in the German of tomorrow, he explains, must have the support of a considerable part of the German people, including the masses, and, especially, the laboring classes. The creation of a monarchy by force through a small, even though powerful, minority, would be a misfortune and could not endure. Every spiritual revolution must be prepared spiritually. The Democrats and Socialists waged a campaign for the revolution through the ideals of republican and international thought with spiritual as well as political methods for forty years. For forty years an increasing number had been moved to fanatical enthusiasm for republics and internationalism and with corresponding hatred for monarchies and militarism, for all that existed of authority in every form. The leaders alleged knowledge to be the goal of the revolution, and used this as a rallying cry, with the more effect that it was made to appear that the monarchy was a reactionary form of state, using its authority solely to deceive and exploit the people and to retard its progress.

The monarchy was forced out, like the Roman Forums, through the influence of pseudo-scientific prophets of liberty and equality, but, as its theory is healthy and genuine, it will return as soon as it is considered intellectually, developed theoretically and propagated openly. It cannot be advanced through political agitations or the Putsch.

Formerly the ballast of the German ship of state was the authority of the empire and of the individual monarchies therein. The republican and international propaganda removed this ballast, the helmsman weakened and lost con-

ART EXHIBITIONS OF PAINTINGS

THE Sketch Exhibition of the National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors is a remarkably pleasant little roomful of studies, fortunately hung against the lovely Davanzati background of the Architectural League Room, lent for the occasion.

Odds and ends of impression emerge from the general sense of gayety conveyed by the modern palette. One notes the skill with which Elinor Barnard handles watercolor and the consistency with which Mary H. Tannahill weaves her street scene, houses, trees and humans, into a flat tapestry web; also the look of jollity in the picture of a peasant woman on a white stepladder pruning trees, by Phoebe Ropes, a design that ought to be a mine of wealth to a stage decorator with a French opera on his hands. Nancy Ferguson's now familiar street scenes translate the naïveté of the primitive into the sophistication of the present with great cleverness. Grace Mott Johnson's "Puma" is clear-cut in character. Edith Magonigle in "Mme. G." achieves the effect of a Japanese print with a rather baffling technique and a distinction all her own. Her miniature "Anne de Coucy" is a marginal note on the medieval past, steeped in appreciation and supremely delicate in expression, lacking, of course, the crisp matter of fact which is the characteristic of ancient things. Janet Scudder shows two little pieces of sculpture, all French flatness in the planes and sharpness in the edges, yet with an American innocence of line.

Three Painters.

The exhibition at the Kingore Galleries is a three-ring affair. In the first gallery are paintings of interiors by Edith Blight Thompson. Mrs. Thompson makes no concessions to the casualness of her training, which is described in the catalogue by Mr. McBride. She tells her stories of rooms severely, glossing over no difficult details of perspective or scale. If she makes a mistake, it is there for the daws to peck at; but her triumphs are much more numerous than her mistakes and her pictures are good portraits, communicating character. The Altman Gallery at the Metropolitan Museum, with its statue and its benches and its shy, beautiful paintings waiting to be discovered, is a portrait of drastic truthfulness. Other rooms are Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt's Library at Westbury, L. I.; a salon of the Duchesse de Noailles, Paris; Mrs Cornelius Vanderbilt's drawing room, the entrance hall in the residence of Lloyd Warren, and the drawing room at Longfields.

The centre room is occupied by a collection of paintings by Gaston la Touche, all characteristic of that dreaming heir of the eighteenth century. His plashing fountains, fireworks at night, formal gardens and parks, graciously modeled figures, wear that look of ancient peace and bland beauty too sweet for the sharpened taste of the present generation, but perfectly in accord with the atmosphere of St. Cloud, where the painter lived and worked behind the mellowed walls of his garden.

The third room is given to portraits by the Polish painter Boleslaw Jan Czedekowski, clever, light of touch, at once languid and lively, an art of agreeable objectivity, hiding its many technical merits behind a polite, ingratiating surface.

Rembrandt and His Contemporaries.

At the Kennedy Galleries is an exhibition of Rembrandt's etchings, together with a number of his contemporaries and a collection of the complete etched work of Antoine Waterloo. The Rembrandts include admirable examples. The famous "Three Trees" is present in an impression of the first rank, all the fine detail in the shadow revealed and the line as brilliant as the first pullings from the plate. A number of the subjects are those that show Rembrandt in his most cheerful mood. Nothing of the pose of reverential solemnity exists in his "Abraham Entertaining the Angels," Abraham, the pleasantest and most urbane of hosts, the bearded angel at his side an appreciative guest. The "St. Jerome," with the delightfully theatrical lion, is another example of the knack the great artist had for creating a situation of homely comfort out of the most unlikely material.

The group of etchings by Waterloo deserves careful attention. The landscapes, with their noble trees, are of the race of Rousseau, and the extreme sincerity and directness of the artist's style are tempered by a note of Gallic lightness.

At the City Club.

The City Club is showing pictures of women and children until Jan. 31. A beautiful experiment in the painting of flaxen hair is undertaken by Howard Giles in his portrait of "Solveg"; Ivan G. Olinsky departs from his slightly mannered manner in his frank study of a mother and child, which he calls "The Equestrian," in honor of a toy horse in the possessive grasp of the child; Jane Peterson is happy and expert in "Elise and Her Dog Dodo," and there are other things by Gordon Stevenson, Leon Kroll, H. L. Hildebrandt and Jane McLane. An unpretentious and pleasant little show of not very definite character.

Prints by Various Masters.

There will be an exhibition of fine prints by old and modern masters at the gallery of E. Weyhe, from Jan. 24 to Feb. 5. In the exhibition are about twenty Zorn etchings, including such rare proofs as "The Antonin Proust," "The Lady at the Piano," "The Two Models Near a Bed" (done in Baltimore), and "The Shallows." There are a number of the famous portraits, such as those of Anatole France, Rodin, Berthelot (the discoverer of synthetic chemistry), and "The Self-Portrait With a Fur Cap." There are about ten Rembrandts, both landscapes and portraits, and a number of etchings by his pupils, Bol and Lievens. Whistler is represented by "The Long Lagoon," "The Little Mast," "The Lagoon at Noon," "The Limeburner," and numerous other rare proofs.

A Cincinnati Painter.

Oliver Bennett Grover, the successor of Duveneck in Cincinnati, is showing a group of his paintings at the Ralston Galleries. The most salient is a portrait of a young man, athletic and slim, in a white shirt against a blue background. The shadows are remarkably luminous, and the upper part of the figure is admirably defined under the loose clothing.

New York Society of Painters.

In the Academy Room of the Fine Arts Building is the exhibition of the New York Society of Painters. One of the pictures that halts the steady progress of the professional visitor is "Gramercy Park," by Felicia Waldo Howell. Possibly the artist's long experience with watercolor has affected her technique. At all events, she works with restraint and economy, leaving hardly a trace of pigment on her canvas, yet managing to suggest a great variety of surface in her rendering of weather-worn buildings and well-trodden streets.

"Pomona," by Clara Weaver Parrish, is a pastel that has something to say of clever methods and a free and happy use of an often overworked medium. Alethea H. Platt has seen a rustic idyl that moved her to unusually poignant expression, an old peasant couple trudging through gray lanes to a church with golden lighted windows. Probably a Frenchman would have approached the subject more in the mood of Buhot with his "Country Neighbors" or Daumier with his old couple gazing at the stars; but it is not sentimentalized and the subject is as universal in its appeal as the Georgics. William R. Derrick's "Wisteria" is enlivened by his admirable geese, and there is characteristic work by Emily Hatch; H. S. Phillips, Maria J. Strean, R. F. Maynard, Howard Russell Butler, William J. Wittemore, Olive P. Black, Sophie M. Brannan, C. C. Curran, Edith Penman, Cullen Yates, Emma Lampert Cooper, Charlotte B. Coman, W. Merritt Post, Clara MacChesney, A. E. A Scheme for Guild Scholarships in the Public Schools.

The Hon. Fiorello H. LaGuardia, President of the Board of Aldermen, will address a very distinguished gathering of representatives from our varied industries and art societies in the assembly room of the Textile Institute, 124 West Thirtieth Street, New York City.

This meeting is called for Tuesday, Jan. 25, at 8:15 o'clock, in the evening. The industrial arts and the fine arts will both be represented through the Fine Arts Federation with its sixteen constituent societies, including the National Academy of Design, Architectural League, the National Society of Mural Painters, and the other organizations devoted to the long-standing and well-recognized forms of artistic expression.

In recent years there has been a rapid development of art as applied to house-furn. hings and objects of ornamentation used in the every-day life of our people, and students of the movement have been gratified to see a general and far-reaching advancement in the decorative crafts in all the industries. This same practical application of our artist's skill and talent has appeared in new forms of reproductive illustration in magazines, books and in the graphic arts as applied to advertising and all forms of pictorial display.

This progress has been especially marked in the field of decorative textiles manufactured by machinery, and the Textile Institute, in West Thirtieth Street, pre-eminently illustrates the great opportunities of New York City as a distributing centre and a style creator for the United States.

Mr. LaGuardia's address is intended to arouse still greater interest in the new educational problems which America's progress in industrial arts now renders acute and filled with far-reaching possibilities.

Prints at the Brooklyn Museum.

The Brooklyn Museum announces an exhibition in the Print Galleries to be opened on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 23, of prints of old Brooklyn and of subjects to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrims. The exhibition will consist of about 150 prints and will continue until Tuesday, Feb. 15, inclusive, and is intended to be a contribution to the Pilgrim Tercentenary Celebration. Only a limited number of subjects, however, which are placed in the smaller gallery relate directly to the Pilgrims. The major part of the exhibition is devoted to the prints of old Brooklyn, and especial attention is called to this matter, for, so far as known, this is the first attempt as far as Brooklyn is concerned, although there have been numerous exhibitions of prints relating to old New York. The exhibition has been made possible through the kindness of various and numerous collectors, especially Robert Fridenberg, the Long Island Historical Society and the Brooklyn Club. Not the least interesting among the exhibits are the maps, numbering seven; there are also a number of panoramic views representing Brooklyn and views of New York from Brooklyn of early dates; there are prints representing historical celebrities connected with events of the Revolutionary War on Long Island; there are prints relating to the old Brooklyn Fire Department, among them one of the first fire engines used in Brooklyn, 1785.

A Notable Concert
A CONCERT of Czechoslovak music was given in the Horace Mann Auditorium at Columbia University on Monday evening, January 17. The program was composed of vocal and instrumental selections from the works of B. Smetana, A. Dvorak and V. Novak. The artists who participated in rendering the program a success were Madame Ella Oumiroff-Spravka, Boza Oumiroff, Otokar Cadak, Jaroslav Siskovsky, Ludvik Schwab and Bedrich Vaska. Madame Oumiroff-Spravka gave "Longing," "A Bohemian Dance" and "The Little Bird" by Smetana, and Mr. Oumiroff, who is a baritone, rendered Czechoslovak folk songs—"At the Well," "Soldiers' Song," "Heavy Roads and Hindered Love."

Muslin That Has Stood the Test of Years

Since our grandmothers filled their wedding chests with muslin articles made from Fruit of the Loom, there has been no change in its manufacture, excepting to improve it.
The process of bleaching has been so perfected that the muslin can be laid away on your shelves for years — and it will not turn yellow.
Fruit of the Loom does not lose its fine, smooth finish after washing.
You will have just the same satisfaction and pleasure in making up this material as have two generations before you.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CHANGED ARMENIAN OUTLOOK

New York, Jan. 17, 1921.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A correspondent, writing in last Sunday's TIMES, makes the suggestion that solution of the Armenian problem may be accelerated by the abandonment to their fate of 2,000,000 Armenians in and around what was formerly Russian Armenia, now the Armenian Republic, and by seeking through Mustapha Kemal, a confederate of Talaat and Enver, an entente for the political emancipation of 1,000,000 Turkish Armenians, of whom only 50,000 are now to be found within the territories which have been awarded to Armenia by President Wilson.

The suggestion that is thus made ignores the logic of events since 1914 and the essential facts of the Armenian case as they exist today, which facts have directed and now direct the policy of Armenian leadership, as they determined the conclusions of the allied statesmen who framed the Sèvres Treaty on Aug. 10, 1920.

In December, 1917, the Russian army of the Caucasus abandoned the Turkish-Armenian front and left the Armenians of that region to the mercy of the Turks. The Georgian neighbors of the Armenians sought and secured German protection, and their Tartar neighbors made common cause with the Turks. But the Armenians, who were thus deserted by Russia, fought the Turks for eight months, and organized a national government which has since been recognized by the Allies and America. The Treaty of Sèvres provided that such portions of the four provinces of Turkish Armenia which President Wilson may award to Armenia shall be incorporated in the Armenian Republic.

Now, for two and a half years, the Armenian Republic pursued a pro-ally policy, but during that period it received no practical aid from the Allied Powers. After seven weeks fighting, it succumbed to the combined Turco-Bolshevist onslaught. Two of the Allied Powers furnished the Turks with arms and munitions, who attacked the Armenians from the south and southwest with an army as large as the one with which they are now attacking a Greek army of 90,000, while nearly 20,000 Tartars and Bolsheviki assaulted them from the north and northeast. In addition to these enemy forces, the Armenians had to contend with Bolshevist propagandists, cold, hunger, and particularly lack of fuel which made it impossible for them to transfer their troops from one front to another. It would obviously be as cowardly as it is impractical to abandon these Armenians to their misfortune for which they can in no wise be blamed.

If a makeshift and necessarily weak government were to be set up in Turkish Armenia, which would, no doubt, be entirely satisfactory to the Turks, it is certain that the 2,000,000 Armenians of Russian Armenia would, in the immediate future, either with or without the consent of Russia, cross over its artificial frontier and upset it.

The fundamental fact in connection with the creation of an Armenian State is that whether such a State include Russian Armenia or not it must have the acquiescence of Russia. Russian Armenia holds no particular strategic or economic value to Russia, such as Batum and Baku possess. Russian leaders, Bolsheviki and anti-Bolsheviki, appreciate the faithful services that the Armenians have rendered, in peace and in war, to Russia, and they also understand the reasonableness of parting with a small strip of land toward the creation of an Armenian State which, of course, must not, as it will not, pursue an anti-Russian policy. The Bolsheviki made common cause with the Turks, not to deprive Armenia of its freedom, but as a means of annoying the allied powers.

All that we can now do is to prevail upon the Allies not to sacrifice Armenian interests in Turkish Armenia, should they revise the Treaty of Sèvres, and then address ourselves to the difficult task of alleviating the sufferings of the Armenians in and around Armenia.

The ultimate solution of the Armenian case must await the re-establishment of friendly relations between Russia and the Allies and America.

PATENT OFFICE CONGESTION

New York, Jan. 17, 1921.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The congested condition of the Patent Office, as pointed out in Mr. Barker's letter, certainly demands the prompt attention of Congress, where the real responsibility lies.

Many thousands of new enterprises are held back by the delays in the Patent Office, as after filing an application for a patent the inventor must often wait six months or more before receiving the first answer of the examiner and a further long period for a second action, since the references cited in the first answer, to previous patents, may go to show that the inventor is entitled to a patent while those supplied later after further search may show that he is not entitled to the patent. This condition of doubt prevents him from enlisting capital in the proposed enterprise and is due solely to lack of sufficient staff help in the Patent Office, as all the references should be given in the first answer.

Basically the neglect of the Patent Office is due to the fault in our legislative system of irresponsibility in the membership of Congress, politically speaking. When Congress neglects its work or fails to adopt or put through a sound policy there is no way to focus public opinion upon those responsible.

No one questions the fact that the Patent Office should have an adequate force. No one questions the fact that it should be properly paid. But nothing is done. The Speaker even appoints members to the Patent Committee who are from rural districts and not only unfamiliar with patent matters but indifferent if not hostile to industrial prosperity and jealous of the profits of manufacture based upon patented inventions. No question of economy arises, as the Treasury has millions of dollars in fees paid in by inventors over and above the cost of running the Patent Office.

The scarcity of examiners and assistant examiners causes another evil, that of requiring the inventor to divide his patent application into several parts, thus putting him to the cost of taking out additional patents, a practice that arises out of insufficient clerical help properly to classify the references.

It furthermore may cause the issuance to an inventor of a patent to which he is not entitled, since failure to find a previously existing patent may cause the examiner to pass the application to issue. After the inventor has gone into the manufacture of the new article the owner of the previous patent is, of course, privileged to stop him, and the entire investment is a loss.

A United States patent should be given a legal standing and a dignity commensurate with its often tremendous value. Instead of being merely a license to bring an expensive series of lawsuits, the Government should stand back of the patent and stop infringements, free of charge to the inventor. This would prove a tremendous stimulation for invention, and this country, which has lagged behind in inventions in the last generation, would come to the front again.

The importance of the work of the Patent Office examiners and their high standard of integrity should be more fully recognized. The position of the examiner who has constantly passing through his hands property values of millions is in reality that of a Judge. His salary should certainly be not less than $10,000 a year. The Commissioner of Patents should determine the policies of the office, the Patent Office being made an independent department, with the first principle that of stimulating invention. For a single invention may be more valuable to the public than the cost of the Patent Office for a generation. And the Patent Office is not costing the public anything; the inventors are paying the whole cost and a great deal more in fees.

A great and needless sacrifice of the inventions of American inventors in favor of the publics of foreign countries is being made, due to the inaction of Congress. In order to secure protection in other countries the American inventor must not only pay the preliminary fees but is subjected to a pernicious annual tax, mounting each year, devised for the purpose of depriving him of his invention. He must furthermore succeed in making arrangements to manufacture the patented invention in each foreign country, as export of the patented article from this country destroys the patent.

In the absence of a system of responsibility the only present hope of the Patent Office lies in the appointment by the incoming Speaker of a Patent Committee composed of men who understand the needs of the situation and who are interested in and familiar with the subject, and who appreciate the fact that the patent system is the generator of new blood for the whole industrial organism of the country.

EDWIN HOPKINS.

LAST DAYS OF JOHN BROWN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Jan. 2 you give an interesting article by William L. Chenery, who quotes somewhat at length from the Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell as to John Brown. Mr. Conwell states, "Well do I recall Dec. 9, 1859, the day when John Brown was hanged." He could not recall that date, as he was hanged on Dec. 2. As I was born at Harper's Ferry, am a relative of Harper and saw the troops taking Brown to Charlestown on Oct. 18, I know something about the affair. Mr. Conwell also says, "On the day set for the execution at Winchester, Va." As Brown met his death at Charlestown, only ten miles from Harper's Ferry, he could not have been hanged at Winchester.

The statement is also made that "a few weeks before [Dec. 9] he had been to our house, and my father had subscribed to the purchase of rifles to aid in the attempt to raise an insurrection among the slaves." As Brown was taken at Charlestown on Oct. 19 and confined in jail until Dec. 2, and was at Harper's Ferry and the Kennedy farm from July 3 to Oct. 16, the day my father was detained back of the church on account of the firing, it must have been more than "a few weeks." Further than this, the rifles were bought in Hartford when Brown was in Kansas, and belonged to the Massachusetts Emigration Society before George L. Stearns purchased them for Brown to use at his discretion. They were shipped here and there for months before reaching Chambersburg, Pa., where Brown had them secretly taken as "hardware" by teams to the Kennedy farm previous to Oct. 16, 1859. These rifles were known as "Beecher's Bibles," and he helped to pay for them.

We are also told in this article that Brown stopped with Mr. Conwell's father, and Brown's "long gray whiskers lay on the bedclothes." It is generally understood that Brown shaved clean until his entering Kansas in 1855. He then allowed his beard to grow as a means to hide his identity, and he could not have had much of a gray beard in 1852; in fact, he had no whiskers in 1856, the date given as his visit to Mr. Conwell. His pictures at that time show a clean-shaven face.

I was downtown among the dead and dying on Wednesday, Oct. 19, and my father took me to the scene of action when Brown was taken to Charlestown. I have for years given considerable study to the raid, and numbered Frank B. Sanborn, who did so much for Brown, as my friend and correspondent.

WILLARD CHAMBERS GOMPF.

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 8, 1921.

[Dr. Conwell mentions Dec. 9 twice in his book as the date of John Brown's hanging, but apparently it is an error.]

AMERICA AND GERMANY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has come! We felt it would. Emil von Salzmann, from Berlin through Stockholm (where he doubtless dropped some good seeds), gets large type and big headings for "Germany Is America's Friend" and "Two Nations Are Russia's Only Hope." You see, it is so simple. German business men are to rebuild her industries with American capital. Nothing of Germany's desire to win back the confidence of America by repairing the wrongs done to France and Belgium. Certainly not—though the worthy military critic knows perfectly well that if France had neglected her obligations to Germany at the end of the first year after the Franco-Prussian war, why, Germany as victor would have occupied Paris and collected indemnity forever after.

America is not complimented by the resemblance that von Salzmann discerns between the Fatherland and the Republic of the West. An American girl, born in Providence, R. I., who was in Berlin, voluntarily from August, 1913, till March, 1917, and involuntarily from the latter date until March, 1919, failed to discover any resemblance at all between the policy of perverted press reports, undignified treatment and general demoralized mode of living in Germany and the spirit of toleration manifested in America toward all, and particularly toward the Germans, who never failed to express their contempt for America and Americans. This lady testifies from actual experience of both countries and has no axe to grind.

A fair and shining example of the unlikeness between America and Germany is evidenced in the publication of his propaganda at all. The picture—the touching reference to the Crown Prince, living in retirement as a country gentleman—savors strongly of the Baron Munchausen. The attempt to create bad feeling against France is part and parcel of Germany's present scheme, while her desire to get into closer touch with England deceives no one, not the English themselves. We always knew Germany to be behind the Russian revolution, and now we see, through the courtesy of our distinguished Prussian guest, her true purpose.

At least the military critic tells one fact when he reports that Germany is recovering daily. After this we may take it from von Salzmann that all is right with the Fatherland. They are today richer than any other country in Europe.

No one will be deceived. Once bitten twice shy! America does not want German alliances and is not flattered by these advances. Let Germany first repent, then regenerate and then repair the damage done to France and Belgium. Then she may come along for our friendship and expect to win our trust—not before!

ALFRED E. HENDERSON.

New York, Jan. 13, 1921.

STUCK AND STEFANSSON

New York, Jan. 12, 1921.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When recently passing through Victoria, British Columbia, I read an article by Mr. E. A. Ranck, reprinted from THE NEW YORK TIMES, in the Nov. 14 issue of The Victoria Colonist, dealing with the life of the late Archdeacon Stuck.

As a personal friend of Mr. Stefansson and as one who is thoroughly familiar with every phase of his work, I wish to draw your attention to the very false impression created by the following paragraph in the article I refer to:

"On another occasion Dr. Stuck, while completing a Winter circuit of the Arctic Coast, aided in bringing back to the Arctic Hospital at Fort Yukon Vilhjalmur Stefansson, the arctic explorer, who had been seriously ill with fever at Herschel Island. This episode, which has never been mentioned by Stefansson, either in his lectures or books, occurred in 1918." * * *

It is a little difficult to gather from the above whether Mr. Ranck is intimating that Mr. Stefansson has attempted to keep his illness a secret from the public or whether he is laboring under the impression that Mr. Stefansson has been concealing the fact that any one assisted him during the period of his recovery. In regard to the latter presumption, it has been my experience to frequently hear Mr. Stefansson refer to the whole-hearted support which he received during his illness from the various people who participated in nursing him back to health, and in particular to the devoted assistance rendered by the Rev. Mr. Fry. In regard to the former interpretation of Mr. Ranck's paragraph, although he is a contributor to the press, he is doubtless in the habit of perusing the pages of his daily press, and it is to be supposed that he, together with a large majority of the general public, both within and without this country, read the full details of Mr. Stefansson's illness at the time that that illness took place.

As to the part actually played by Archdeacon Stuck: Archdeacon Stuck himself narrates the true facts of the case in his book, "My Winter Circuit of the Arctic Coast." Although it had been his intention to aid Mr. Stefansson, he did not arrive in time and was consequently unable to render any assistance. Mr. Stefansson having already been moved under the very competent direction of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Regarding Mr. Ranck's statement that Mr. Stefansson has never mentioned the "episode" either in his lectures or books, it is necessary to draw attention to the fact that Mr. Stefansson's lectures—which it has been my pleasure to listen to on many occasions—deal purely with the principles of arctic exploration, the climatic conditions, vegetation and animal life, and the technique of living "off the country." Mr. Stefansson has no more reason to discuss the incident of his illness than any other extraneous matter wholly unconnected with the subject of his lecture.

Mr. Stefansson's relations both with Archdeacon Stuck and his church have always been most cordial. When a move was inaugurated by the church to raise funds in the East, Mr. Stefansson took an active part in financially assisting them through the medium of his lectures. As President of the Explorers' Club of New York, Mr. Stefansson personally nominated Archdeacon Stuck for membership. When he was last in New York the Explorers' Club gave Archdeacon Stuck a special luncheon in his honor, at which Mr. Stefansson made a speech dealing with the various phases of Archdeacon Stuck's splendid work.

G. de GRANDCOURT.

AN "AMERICAN" LANGUAGE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

State Librarian John Henry Newman of Columbus, Ohio, in his "hope" for the establishment of a new language "more concise and forceful than any spoken, composed of all spoken languages and denominated 'American'" says nothing new and is neither instructing, interesting nor convincing.

Our national history and the observation of our tendencies as a people are factors that have weight in the consideration of such a proposition. What then do we find? The Dutch colonists were people of character and capacity, with "red-blood" to boot. Their influence profoundly affected generations of New Yorkers and persists even to this day. But of their language there was but one word ("stoep") which found its way into circulation and remains in our common vocabulary. The French were early settlers in sections of this country, and most certainly they lacked not in "red-blood," but what was their contribution to our common tongue? Later, the Germans and other peoples established themselves in great numbers but what German or other foreign words have been adapted by us to meet our linguistic requirements? In his outgiving, Mr. Newman himself fails to use a single word that is other than common English.

The manner of Mr. Newman in presenting his "hope" is unfortunate. He would drop the "English label," and he has wondered for years why any "red-blooded American should ape one in anything." Alas, for the coming American language, if it has to be forced by such stuff as this! Red blood is all very fine and large, but a little gray matter really counts. Mr. Newman may be listened to respectfully when he offers a few new words of American origin, apt, euphonious and expressive.

New York, Jan. 18, 1921. W. T.

age, and the ship foundered. In other words, it was the unripeness of the people which led them to abandon the monarchy instead of acting in time to remove its threatening dangers. For it must be remembered that a monarchy calls for the highest political development of a people, shown in frank submission to admittedly necessary authority.

Now the question is whether the supporters of the monarchy, to whose lack of wisdom in the past was due its failure to develop, realize that they must hereafter proceed upon the foundation of accomplished facts—proceed acually and not merely pretend to do so. Bismarck and the old Kaiser Wilhelm understood how to use the social movements, the necessity of liberality accompanied by relentless maintenance of authority. Had the same policy been pursued by their successors several of the existing radical parties could have been developed in harmony with the Right within the frame of the monarchy, and would thus have frustrated internationalism, which was the chief curse of the revolutionary propaganda. But the Right lacked suppleness and a psychological insight into the times. It failed to realize that the old conservative thought and ways, with all their clearness, strength and consistency, showed signs of sclerosis—which disease increases with age.

But all German parties are like rotten trees, observes the Count, and have produced only unwholesome fruit. Hatreds remain undiminished and the Socialists, following their recent failure to dominate at the elections, present the amusing spectacle of a people's party railing at the "blind masses" who failed to support them.

Monarchical Socialist State.

It is the internationalism of the Socialists which arouses the Count here and there from his philosophic mood. He does not mind radicalism, even in the Communists, provided it is limited strictly to matters German. Apparently, he believes that so long as Germans keep away from outsiders they can be kept within bounds, whatever their theories or professions. For the future, he exclaims, the watchwords must be National and Social. In spite of all the disappointments and depressing experiences the hope remains that nationalism may yet prove the foundation for unifying the opposing parties, groups and movements.

A Socialistic state, founded upon nationalism within the frame of a monarchy, would be the salvation of the German future. Not a frivolous equality, as the creators of the revolution and their successors wished to have it. Not at all. The formation of a Socialist state is not so simple and primitive. Words need not engender fear, he assures his friends. A government of specialists, representing different callings, which would obviate the existing system of professional politicians, is a distinct possibility. It must be remembered that the council (equivalent to Soviet) dates back to ancient German custom, and, recreated to meet modern conditions, with representation of all elements—the intellectual as well as the economical—might well be the backbone of a new monarchy.

Bolshevism is not within Reventlow's scheme, it must be understood, any more than the equality doctrine of Socialism. Lest this be misunderstood he expands freely upon the theory that man in general is capable of the higher development. "It would be fortunate," he declares, "if the events of these last years had rooted out the pseudo idea of the progress of humanity. This came out of the Freemasons' kitchen, as did that of liberty and equality, and, especially in German heads, caused actual devastation. It was this faith in the progress of humanity which was one of the causes of the loss of the war. Even as a boy this idea seemed absurd to me and this feeling has strengthened with the years. It is a pity that the use of the word 'humanity' cannot be forbidden in Germany."

In place of such puerile notions he calls for a development of a "well-considered and strongly-felt Kultur," to be limited to Germans. Everything else would follow. But, he adds warningly, only a few Germans understand what Kultur signifies. It is almost invariably interpreted as the equivalent of civilization, seldom understood as action, becoming a thing dynamic; something that disappears so soon as it is neglected, to revive only when it is again brought into use.

Perhaps, after that his old companions may forgive him. His heart is in the right place when it comes to fundamentals, and an author, who is also a Graf, may be indulged some humors. Anyhow, he doesn't divulge whom he prefers for the headship of his socialist-soviet-monarchy, and many hearts may be stimulated with ambition. The real Junkers were never too loyal to the Hohenzollerns to quarrel with old friends who suggest a new deck and a fresh shuffle.

KAISER'S LAND FOR MISSION

Woman Relief Worker's Unique Career in Turkey and Armenia.

IN a recent news item was the brief report that a Turkish estate, formerly owned by the German Emperor, had been turned over to Miss Mary Louise Graffam, an American relief worker, of New England origin. Inquiries at the headquarters of the Near East Relief and missionary societies have served to piece together the story of Miss Graffam and her unusual career in one of the most troubled corners of the world.

The "Kaiser's estate," it appears, was acquired at Sivas, Turkey, by the German ruler or his government in the era when German dreams of world dominion included the establishment of German dignitaries in all foreign lands, resident upon broad acres and in palatial abodes befitting the representatives of a dominant nation. The estate at Sivas was one such. Then came the war. The estate was in the hands of a custodian appointed by the Kaiser or his government. This custodian was domineering and none too friendly to Miss Graffam and her missionary work. After the war, however, he handed over to her the titles of the property. Just how he came to do this is not clear, but the assumption is that pressure was exerted by the Turks, who had been brought to entertain a high regard for the self-sacrificing woman.

Anyway, she got the estate, on which today is maintained her orphanage sheltering more than 1,100 boys and girls. There she has installed her industrial schools, comprising shops for carpentry, tailoring, weaving and other manual training. She has been appointed director of the district's American Relief Unit and is perhaps the most influential foreigner in that region.

Miss Graffam was borne in Maine and educated at Oberlin College. After teaching a few years in Massachusetts, she decided to become a missionary and was sent to Sivas, in Asia Minor, chosen by missionaries more than seventy years ago as a base. Here the little compound held by the Congregational Church consisted of less than an acre of ground, on which was built a hospital, a dwelling house and a school for girls. In 1901 Miss Graffam became principal of the high school and supervisor of all the schools for girls, with 700 pupils.

Her regular work included the teaching of algebra, geometry and the Bible in the girls' school, trigonometry in the teachers' college and other subjects which no one else happened to want. She was also church organist, mission treasurer, director of Y. M. C. A. relief work for widows, and itinerant missionary, traveling on horseback to distant vilayets through mountain blizzards.

When the war came, and the Turks and Russians were clashing near Erzerum, typhus was raging through the district. The Turkish Government sent a call to the foreigners in Sivas for doctors and nurses. Miss Graffam, with several others, volunteered. At Erzerum she was made matron and head nurse of the Red Crescent Hospital. Unsatisfied, commandeered as an alien enemy, she became monarch of all she surveyed. If there was some demur about obtaining milk from the kitchen when she wanted it, she induced the doctor to write "milk" upon every patient's daily card, and so proceeded to administer it as she saw fit. Letters of gratitude are still being received by her from the Turkish officers who were under her care.

After the Winter campaign was over she began her journey back to Sivas, with one of her aids, Miss Zengar. The inns were hotbeds of typhus, the roadways were lined with dead men and horses. Half way back Miss Zengar contracted the disease and died. Miss Graffam continued on her way. Four days from Sivas two Armenian teachers, who had volunteered for a search, found her. She had walked most of the way to save the sick horses that were hardly able to pull an empty wagon.

It was in the Spring when she returned, in time for the commencement exercises of her class of 1915. She was informed that there would be no such exercises. The deportation decree had been issued. This meant the imprisonment of the leading men, and the eviction of all Armenian women and children. She besought the Vali to leave a few of them in Sivas.

"Why keep any behind?" he said. "They are going safely. Why separate families?"

"I intend to accompany them on deportation," she informed him.

The Government was supposed to provide an ox cart for each family. Miss Graffam secured two ox carts, two horse arabas, five or six donkeys, and a supply of medicine, food and money. Thus began her journey into the desert. There the Armenians were robbed of everything but the clothes on their backs. She could count more than fifty fall by the wayside each day. Three thousand that had come into personal contact with her at the compound walked as one band. Through the desert she walked with them.

One day at sunset the officers singled out 200 men and marched them away, while at noon the next day the march of their mothers and sisters was continued. She saw them crazed and dying with thirst and some of them shot down if they went to the river to drink. Her own clothes were in rags and her nerves wrecked. Finally permission to go on was refused to her, and she was taken with an aged woman as companion, into Malatia. Here she was detained for three weeks. From her window she could watch numbers of Armenians being sent to their death.

Free again at last, she returned to Sivas. After being driven from the compound, she rented houses and barns for destitute refugees coming from all directions. She started a factory for the manufacture of flannels and sweaters for the Turkish Army. When Armenians were found in it, she said: "They are working for the Government."

It was at this point that she was able to lease a farm in the hills about the city. No one was supposed to know to whom it belonged, but later the story went around that it was the property of the German Emperor. When the end of the war came and Miss Graffam represented the conquerors and not the conquered, the agent came to her with the titles. She was so nonplused that she questioned his motive as well as his power to act. However, he insisted that he held the power of attorney, and turned the deeds over to her. These she has since verified in Constantinople.

In 1917 she was decorated by the Turkish Government "as a reward for her self-devotion in the cause of the sick and ill-fated ones."

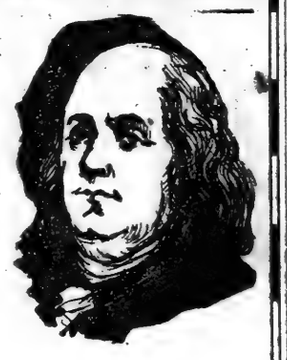
"Keep Your Savings!"—Said Franklin

Our Plan Makes It Easy



Besides "discovering electricity" (as some school children think to-day), Benjamin Franklin's name will always be linked with Thrift and Saving. And the century whose end saw the death of Franklin ushered in a century whose beginning saw the birth of Cowperthwait & Sons.

114 years have passed since our establishment was founded and yet our name too is still associated with the idea of Saving. For through our Liberal Credit Plan you can now make your home dreams come true—without breaking into your savings or your bank account. No need to touch that nest egg you have laid away. No need to wait and hope for the home-things you've always longed for.

Don't touch your savings! Keep your money in the bank! Let your "small change" bring a big change in your home. Here you will find the things you want at a Saving Price and on a special Saving Plan!

ITALIAN HISTORY TOLD IN PICTURES

The Mid-Week Pictorial, the weekly magazine published by The New York Times Co., issue of January 20th, 1921, contains a picture history of Italy from 1860 to the present; it embraces pictures of the great statesmen who effected the unity and redeemed the lost provinces, with maps showing the growth and some interesting war pictures. In the same issue are 135 etchings portraying big news events, the drama, art, politics, science and other features. On news stands, 10 cents per copy.

MOTORLESS SWISS CANTON

The Grisons Alone in Europe Bar Automobiles From Their Roads

By T. R. YBARRA.

AMERICAN tourists who have visited Bermuda have marveled how that conservative little island has been able to maintain its prohibition against automobiles in the face of their triumphant invasion of the rest of the globe. Yet there is another community—not an island but one set squarely in the centre of Europe and forming part of a country which is surpassed by none as a resort for tourists—which, having sternly set its face against allowing automobiles within its borders, has just maintained that prohibition against strong opposition from some of its inhabitants who believe that local interests are being seriously hurt by this ultra-conservatism.

The community in question is the Swiss canton of the Grisons—or Graubünden, as it is known to its German-speaking inhabitants. In spite of the fact that thousands of tourists from all over the world annually visit Switzerland, that many of them bring their own automobiles for extensive motoring tours and that great numbers of the rest avail themselves of automobiles for seeing portions of the country not easily accessible by rail, the prejudice in the Grisons against the automobile is so great that not even the new birth of Switzerland's tourist trade after the war has operated to remove the prohibition.

Switzerland, like the United States, is a federation. The cantons forming it retain to a certain extent their local rights of self-government, like the States of the American Union. They have delegated to the Federal Government at Berne only such rights as are set forth in the Constitution under which the Swiss Federation was formed. The cantonal authorities of the Grisons ordained in 1900 that motor cars must not use the roads of the canton. The hotel man of the Grisons soon realized that tourist trade was being turned away from them to other parts of Switzerland, where automobiles were welcomed, and they tried to do away with the prohibition. They found support among other elements of the population of the canton who argued that the disadvantages of allowing automobiles to share with the old-time diligences and other horse vehicles the cantonal roads could be offset by suitable police control, as had been done in the remaining cantons of Switzerland and all over the world.

But the solid mass of the anti-gasoline section of the population was too strong. The Cantonal Council, influenced by the partisans of the automobile, brought forward in 1908 a project for allowing automobiles to use some of the main roads of the cantons, but it was promptly vetoed in the Cantonal Legislative Assembly. Subsequent agitation by the pro-gasoline faction only served to intensify the rigid attitude of the enemies of the automobile. In 1911 the Legislature of the Grisons not only declared that prohibition of the automobile in the canton was to be upheld in its full force but added a clause forbidding the Cantonal Council from making any exceptions to the rule.

When the great European war broke out in 1914, the Swiss Government mobilized its army to prevent the use of Swiss territory by the belligerents. The automobile, it was soon recognized, was absolutely indispensable in such an emergency, and the Swiss federal authorities, by virtue of the extraordinary powers conferred upon them, overruled the automobile prohibition in the Grisons and used the roads of that canton, as freely as those of the rest of Switzerland, for military motor trucks. Later, these roads were also thrown open to motor vehicles in the service of the medical authorities and for supplying provisions and fuel to communities suffering from shortage of these necessaries.

But in spite of everything, the enemies of the automobile in the canton of the Grisons remained adamant. As soon as the wartime emergency was a thing of the past they defeated a project for partial revocation of the prohibition against motor vehicles and brought about a reversion in May of the present year to the law of 1911, prohibiting automobiling within the borders of the cantons and revoking all special licenses granted during the period of the wartime emergency.

This was the start of a lively fight. Those in favor of the automobile turned to the Swiss federal authorities, demanding repeal both of the law of 1911 and the 1920 decision to uphold it, on the ground that they were in contravention of the article in the Swiss Constitution guaranteeing trading and industrial freedom. This article, they asserted, included the right of free traffic on the roads of all the Swiss cantons, subject to police regulations based upon local necessities. In view of the importance of the automobile on the mountain roads of the Grisons, continued its champions, where distances were considerable and means of communication scarce, the prohibition against it was in restraint of trade, since it greatly impaired the circulation of travelers in the canton; the Swiss constitution, they pointed out, granted to citizens the right not only to ply their trade but to do so in a way consonant with their interests.

But once more the enemies of the automobile were victorious. The Swiss federal tribunal, before which the question came, has recently handed down a decision to the effect that every Swiss canton has absolute jurisdiction over local matters in so far as this right is not expressly limited by the Swiss Constitution. It points out that the right of the cantons to regulate traffic on their roads is absolute, provided their action does not infringe upon trade and industrial freedom as provided for in the Constitution. In the present case, declares the court, there has been no such infringement.

out of the unimportant mechanism which they have been inhabiting, which has been called a man and has been mistaken for an individual, and select some other habitat or habitats. Perhaps they become the animating force of something else or many other things."

Mr. Edison's answer to the fourth question was brief. He was asked: "Where do you think the units of personality reside after so-called 'death'?" He replied.

"These little entities of personality which I hope to detect with my apparatus are still animal entities. But who created them, or where they go after they leave a given body, I do not know. I surmise that they take up residence in another body; but I have no information on the subject."

The next question was:

"On what principle would your machine work to apprehend these units?"

The writer amplified the question by asking further how the inventor attacked the problem of approaching the task of building the machine. This the inventor answered as follows:

"What difference does that make? There are half a dozen ways of making a machine or of approaching the problem.

"The principle upon which the apparatus is planned is that of control. A man with very puny strength sets into motion a machine with power infinitely greater than his own."

The sixth question: "How would you describe your apparatus?" Mr. Edison declared to be relatively unimportant. The interest of the people, he indicated, would be centred in whether the apparatus was successful rather than a description of it.

Generally, from talks on the two occasions with the inventor, the following impression was gained concerning the apparatus Mr. Edison is working upon:

Hopes to Register "Units."

The units of personality are to act as a control. Just as an electric spark fires a cannon with an effect infinitely greater than the cause, just as man with his small one-eighth horse-power strength sets into motion forces his brain cannot yet compute, so Mr. Edison hopes to build a mechanism of exquisite fineness and great power upon which the now impalpable life units of personality will make themselves known, will register. Does this mean messages from the dead, instructions from the departed as to future conduct, descriptions of existance of souls shorn from body—all that heterogeneity of spiritistic ware that the man on the street has offered to him these days? Mr. Edison, being a scientist and not a medium, is hardly at this point concerned with this implication of his undertaking. He is not prepared to say if he succeeds in constructing an apparatus that can register the stimuli of personality units, once resident within the body and now gone from it, that it will mean the opening of free communication with the dead. What Mr. Edison does say is that should his theories prove correct and should his apparatus succeed in apprehending the stimuli, it will be the first step in a correct understanding of the entire problem of life and death, and will lead the way to the development of concrete communication with the dead.

The seventh question: "Do you earnestly feel that 'communication with the dead' can be established?" received a quick, short answer that left nothing to be desired. Mr. Edison said:

"There is a doubt. I am not sure. That's the reason I am experimenting. But if I didn't believe, I wouldn't try."

After a measure this reply was also an answer to the next question. "What measure of hope do you hold out for the thousands who have lost dear ones in the war and who desire to be assured of their existence after 'death'?" Mr. Edison held out to them all the hope that was contained in a scientific, unprejudiced investigation of a vital question. He hoped and believed he would succeed. More could not be asked of him.

Question nine was: "How long have you been engaged in your investigations and how soon do you think they may be completed?"

"I have been reading and working for fifty years. I was more closely attracted to the problem about three years ago. I was thinking of the war and the cruelty of nature. Billions of human prayers have been sent up, yet without apparent results. Millions have died. Malignant cruelty was apparent. I thought there might be a way of determining whether nature is as cruel as she appeared. Nature a tiger—this didn't look like a beneficent Providence.

"Somebody has to explain this problem. Somebody has to start working on it scientifically. I hope my activities may set moving 500 other investigators. I may work ten years more on the problem. Others may work twenty, thirty, forty years each. Two hundred years may elapse before results are attained. The airplane and steamship were really invented thousands of years ago; somebody started the work that is not yet completed.

"The ball has got to start a-rolling. I am taking a try at it."

The writer finally asked: "What is your opinion of mediums, ouija boards, table rappings, and spiritualism?"

Mr. Edison's opinions on this head were decided and brief. He is not interested in the "spirit" stuff.

"Soul, spirit doesn't mean anything to me.

"The grub, when it 'dies,' splits open. A remarkable change occurs, a butterfly comes forth. I'm investigating the butterfly existence of human life; but I have nothing to do with 'transmigration' of souls. One is scientific; the other I know nothing of."

GOVERNMENT'S BLUE BOOK.

THE printing of the Official Register of the United States, the directory of Government officials and employes popularly known as the "Blue Book," probably costs more than any other Government publication. The report of the Division of Publications of the Department of Commerce shows that an edition of 3,251 copies of the 1919 volume, consisting of 1,704 pages, cost $55,715.33 approximately $11 per copy. The charge for the paper stock used in this publication was $3,320.68. The issuance of this book is required by law.

The printing bill for all publications issued by the Department of Commerce during the fiscal year 1920 was $425,370.73. These figures represent the cost of 975 miscellaneous reports and various issues of periodical publications. The free distribution of publications issued by that department has been greatly curtailed, and as a result the receipts through sales by the Superintendent of Documents and other agencies have increased from $53,080.93 in 1919 to $96,977.47 in 1920.

Next in Necessity to a Home

THE utility and necessity of an automobile are so well established that in communities where cars are common, social life is practically organized on a basis of automobile ownership.

After you and your wife have decided that your circumstances and habits demand that you buy a new car, the next questions you will want answered are:

Is this car good enough for us?

Is it good-looking enough?

Are we perfectly safe in buying it?

Part of that last question involves the stability and intentions of the manufacturer behind the car. The Standard Eight is made by the Standard Steel Car Company of Pittsburgh, a large company of ample resources, and with the determination to become a permanent leader in the automobile field.

The other two questions can be completely answered by a better acquaintance with the power and appointments of the Standard Eight.

Not a history of facts
But the facts of history

A complete War Library. Its contents consist of the most important writings of the master minds of the world on every phase of the war. The essential official documents of all nations. The authentic records of diplomatic exchanges. Impartial chronicles of historic episodes. Thrilling descriptions of Great Battles on Land and Sea. Official reports of commissions and investigators. Maps of all campaigns. All illustrations in the soft texture rotogravure. Historic cartoons of all the nations.

The first volumes contain a comprehensive introduction prepared by such historical authorities as Albert Bushnell Hart, Ph. D., LL. D., Litt. D., of Harvard University; Paul van Dyke, D. D., of Princeton; Charles Seymour, Ph.D., of Yale, and Dr. W. E. Lingelbach of the University of Pennsylvania. They are clear, vivid and powerful discussions of the periods under review.

As each volume has a narrative history of the war the 20 periods are thus covered by eminent historians.

Embraced in the volumes are the speeches, writings, discussions and public utterances of such eminent authorities as:

President Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, General Pershing, Lloyd George, William H. Taft, Sir Edward Grey, T. von Bethmann Hollweg, Pope Benedict XV., Marshal Joffre, Thomas A. Edison, Hugo Muensterberg, Sir Edward Carson, Rudyard Kipling, Maxim Gorky, James Bryce, Henryk Sienkiewicz, Lord Northcliffe, Maximilian Harden, George Bernard Shaw, Gabriele d'Annunzio, Maurice Maeterlinck, Count von Bernstorff, Lord Kitchener, Joseph H. Choate, Conan Doyle, Cardinal Mercier, Arthur James Balfour.

OFFICIALLY INDORSED—

The New York Times War Volumes have been officially indorsed by Libraries and Schools in all parts of the United States. The War Volumes have received also the indorsement of the Chief Critics of Eminent American Statesmen, of Leaders of the Army and of the Navy, of Scholars, Authors, Leaders in Finance, Industry and Commerce.

From the Political Science Review, August, 1920.

"The series of War Volumes published by The New York Times constitute the most comprehensive war history yet published. These twenty volumes make up a veritable war encyclopedia and cover every phase of the great conflict. The military aspects of the struggle form the main theme, of course; but the political and economic problems of these dramatic years also receive adequate attention. No individual author or group of authors could have acquired the facilities which The New York Times possessed in the gathering of this material. The work is not a mere narrative, but also includes reprints of a great many important documents which are nowhere else accessible. Diplomatic correspondence, for example, military reports, the speeches of diplomats and statesmen, official communiques, and so forth, are all announced policy of turning over the powers of government to the Filipinos had not progressed as rapidly as the Filipinos, who had supported our policy, in their natural impatience, thought was right and proper and indeed regarded as agreed upon. In October, 1913, in appreciation of this feeling, when Governor General Harrison arrived in the Islands, coming as the first representative of a Democratic Administration to preside over the destinies and to direct the development of the islands, he was authorized by President Wilson to make assurances in his inaugural address. The very words of the special Presidential message which the new Governor General delivered to the Filipinos on this memorable occasion read as follows:

"We regard ourselves as trustees, acting not for the advantage of the United States, but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for their independence. And we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the islands will permit.

"The Administration will take one step at once. It will give to the native citizens of the islands a majority in the appointive commissions, and this in the upper as well as in the lower house of the Legislature. It will do this in the confident hope and expectation that immediate proof will thereby be given, in the action of the commission under the new arrangement, of the political capacity of those native citizens who have come forward to represent their people in affairs."

Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison, in his statement made in 1915 before the Senate committee investigating Philippine affairs with reference to the result that had followed placing complete legislative control in the hands of the natives, said: "The Philippine Commission was thereupon reconstructed and a majority thereof was given to the Filipinos (October, 1913). Since then nothing has happened to show that that was not a proper and a wise thing to do. In fact, everything that has come to hand is an entire justification of its wisdom and propriety."

As a result of this high recommendation of a distinguished administrator, in August, 1916, the Congress of the United States enacted the Philippine legislation known as the Autonomy act, the preamble of which reads: "Whereas it is, as it always has been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein. * * *"

Stable Government Realized.

Governor General Harrison, in his address at the joint session of the Philippine committees of the Senate and the House in June, 1919, in the sixth year of his administration said (and this was the first time that definite assurances as to the progress of the Philippine people had been made in such emphatic terms): "I wish to state upon my responsibility as Governor General that, in my opinion, there exists today in the Philippine Islands a stable government, which, I think, answers the requirements laid down by President McKinley, and, as I understand it, also by Mr. Root, namely, a Government elected by the suffrages of the people, which is supported by the people, and which is capable of maintaining order and of fulfilling its international obligations. I would be glad to impress upon the members of this committee my earnest recommendation that a grant be made of Philippine independence at the earliest moment when, in the judgment of the committee, it is possible to do so."

After the fruitful years that followed the enactment of the autonomy legislation, Mr. Harrison, in his message to the Legislature of the islands on Oct. 16, 1919, said: "Having organized during the past four years the form of self-government provided for you by the act of Congress of Aug. 29, 1916, you are now awaiting further action by Congress looking to the establishment of the independence of the Philippines. * * * While you are waiting for the final step by Congress, permit me to express the belief that you will continue your progressive labor and constructive reform, and that during this period of patient expectation you will in your deliberations and councils continue to show that prudence, moderation and public spirit which have characterized the Philippine Legislature during these seven years in which, with the greatest satisfaction and confidence, I have been associated with you."

Helping to Win the War.

The American Philippine policy, by withstanding the strain of the great conflict, received its consecration of fire in the World War. While under great stress and strain at home, all the powers that had colonial possessions and were allied in the struggle to preserve civilization had to strengthen and increase their colonial armies of occupation, and they had to meet not merely external aggression. All colonies were armed to the teeth, with the exception of the Philippine Islands, where perfect peace and order prevailed throughout the trying four years, and we were, indeed, enabled to reduce our military forces there to what in the terms of great war preparation was merely a corporal's guard.

While the French were fighting for existence on the banks of the Marne, they had to increase their army in Cochin China. In British Malaysia there were serious risings, fomented, no doubt, by cunning, unscrupulous enemies, and the insurrection at Singapore early in 1915 might have proved disastrous to white prestige in the Far East but for the opportune landing of overwhelming Japanese forces from a Japanese fleet. In a word, our European neighbors on the East Coast of Asia were compelled to spend millions in money and thousands in men to maintain their disputed supremacy, while our Filipino wards furnished us with millions in money and many thousands of men to aid in our crusade. Further, they presented to the American Navy a torpedo boat and a destroyer, and as many as a hundred thousand islanders volunteered to fight for America and that civilization to which we had introduced them.

The Philippine Legislature, in its opening session on Oct. 16, 1917, by joint resolution made the following declaration: "The Legislature deems it a duty incumbent upon it to voice the unequivocal expression of the loyalty of the people of these islands to the cause of the United States in the present war. * * * We realize that in this war there are being tried out in the balance the greatest principles of humanity and right which in the future will be the foundation of the stability, peace and security of all nations, whether they be great or small, belong to one race or another. * * *

"We firmly believe that the final triumph of democracy in securing for the world the principle of nationality for the benefit of the small nation will finally enable our people to attain the ideals for which we have always struggled, namely, our constitution into a free and independent nation, with a democratic government of law and order, ready to be another instrument of democracy and universal progress."

Offered 25,000 Fighters.

But the people of the Philippine Islands had forestalled their legislators, quickly as these latter had acted. Immediately upon our entrance into the war, they authorized Governor Harrison to offer the services of 25,000 men. There was some delay in the acceptance of this offer at Washington, a not unnatural delay in view of the fact that there were millions of men nearer home available and scores of problems of outfit and preparation closer to the capital that had to be solved.

But, while awaiting the enactment of the necessary legislation by Congress, the Filipinos did not rest on their oars. Enrollment committees were created throughout the islands and in an incredibly short time thousands of men, after undergoing stringent mental and physical examination, donned khaki and more than 28,000 volunteers in the war for world-wide democracy, the very elite of the sons of the islands, were selected for service abroad. And in the meantime an officers' training camp, in fact two, with a capacity sufficient to provide officers for a whole division, was started near Manila and the courses were largely attended.

In November, 1918, the authority for the federalization of this National Guard division was received, and the mobilization of the Philippine contingent at Camp Claudio, so named in honor of the first Filipino who fell in the cause of world liberty, was completed. Due to conditions over which they had no control, due to difficulties inherent in their geographical position, the Filipino soldiers did not take their place with the other volunteers of liberty upon the frontier of civilization in France; but they did what they could, and their effort should be appreciated by all. It certainly is appreciated by those Americans who know what the Filipino accomplished and are also familiar with the obstacles to service which by zeal and energy he overcame.

The Filipino sailors were more fortunate. More than six thousand of them saw service in the American Navy as enlisted men. Many served in the danger zone of the North Sea and many met heroic deaths in the performance of their trying duties. Scores of them served on the mine sweepers in the North Sea barrage and their record under peculiarly trying circumstances was excellent. A great number of these men have now re-enlisted for permanent service in the navy.

Perhaps no finer tribute to the zeal for service of the Filipino can be paid than by merely citing the behavior of the Filipino laborers resident in the Territory of Hawaii. These men had left hearth and home to make their little fortunes in the sugar lands of Hawaii, and with the tremendous enhancement of the value of sugar under war conditions their position at Honolulu was most enviable. The wage they received was at least double the pre-war wage in the Philippines, and the war wage was four times that. These men were not only fortune hunters, but they could have claimed, on other grounds, exemption from the Selective Service law. But four thousand of their number enrolled immediately under the Stars and Stripes and many of them saw service in France. And, indeed, if the truth be told, further afield. I personally ran across two boys from the Pasig doing their bit in Belgrade on the lower Danube in April, 1919.

Millions of Liberty Bonds.

To those who know the value of money in the islands, where capital on loan upon gilt-edged security garners a harvest of 10 or 12 per cent., the participation of the Filipino in the Liberty Loans, which could only appeal to him as a patriotic duty, was, perhaps, his most remarkable performance. In the first loan, no allotment for the islands was made; but something more than $300,000 was subscribed. For the second loan, $1,000,000 was allotted to Manila, and this was oversubscribed 100 per cent. Under the third loan the quota assigned was $3,000,000, and nearly $1,000,000 was subscribed, of which $3,000,000 came from the little pueblos of the Provinces. However, it was in the fourth loan that the Filipinos really got into the financial fray. A corps of more than two thousand four-minute men was organized, and these orators penetrated to the most distant districts. The allotment was $8,000,000, and, confessedly, the organizers, all natives, were frightened. Could they ever raise this tremendous sum? The convincing answer was soon forthcoming. When the campaign closed, the islanders had subscribed for $12,200,000 worth of bonds, or twice their quota, with $200,000 to spare.

Let me complete this notable record with the comment of Jacob Gould Schurman, President of the First Philippine Commission and a friend of the islanders from the early days. The words were written by him upon hearing the news of the resolution that had been passed by the Filipino Congress, meeting under the Autonomy act of 1916 and adhering to the cause of the United States in the World War:

"That action is an impressive and moving vindication of the policy which the American Government has followed in the archipelago, the policy of the Philippines for the Filipinos." Mr. Schurman added:

"I spent the greater part of the year 1899 in the Philippines. How black and hopeless the prospect looked! War, suspicion and racial animosity! But through it all I thought I saw a solution of the Philippine problem in the policy of ever-increasing self-government for the Filipinos, not even excluding the goal of independence, when the Filipinos were able to undertake it, if ever, indeed, they desired it. * * *

"And I believe there is nothing in reason that the Filipinos may hereafter desire of the American people and Government which will not be granted to them. One democracy can fix no ultimate limits to the democracy of another people. The future of Philippine democracy is assured."

The Philippine people have withstood a trying ordeal in a brilliant manner. It only now remains for the American people in Congress assembled to once and for all bring confusion upon those misinformed or prejudiced people who have sought to misrepresent our policy abroad or to divert it from honorable channels at home. The next step is Philippine independence if the Filipinos desire it. President Wilson pointed the way in his December message to Congress. "I respectfully submit," he said, "that this condition precedent [the maintenance of a stable government] having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet."

"LAY-BY" SCHOOLS.

ADULT illiterates to the number of 2,715 were taught to write during the last year by the State Department of Education and the Illiteracy Commission of South Carolina, acting in close co-operation. Elementary schools for adults were maintained in thirty-six counties of the State, and 451 teachers were employed at a total cost for salaries of $21,976. The enrolment was 8,338 pupils, and 4,815 of them were white. The oldest pupil was a negro aged 86, and the oldest white pupil was 73. Classes met usually three times a week from 8 to 10 P. M. during the Winter months, but in many farming communities "lay-by" schools were organized during the Summer. Regular day teachers were employed, and the State paid them $1 an hour. In some instances county funds were used to supplement the salaries paid by the State.

...apers are after the Mayor, as you say, as if mud can pile enough mud ... Hylan is bound to get grimed ... However, there's a personal element in it that I can't escape and don't want to escape. When I took offices I found the representatives of the press at headquarters exercising a sort of overlordship, claiming rights to all information on the instant, regardless of the evil effects of premature publication, and demanding access to every police record. It was a condition that should never have been permitted, and I ended it. To the press to-day are given the fullest rights in the matter of news, but it is no longer the case that the Police Department is regarded merely as an agency for the manufacture of items. The change aroused bitterness and is responsible for much of the attack upon me. It was a proper order, however, and as long as I am Commissioner it will be enforced. I want the friendship of the press and have the highest regard for the large majority of honest men employed at headquarters, but I do not intend to buy friendship at the price of efficiency or by the surrender of my proper authority.

"Resign? Not a chance. There's no quitting blood in me. I did not ask for this job, but, having accepted it, I do not mean to be scared out of it. As I told you before, there are no secret chapters in my official book. There is not a Grand Jury, nor even any responsible body of the citizenship, that I am unwilling to face, that I am not eager to face. And until specific charges are made, until the defamers of the Police Department file a bill of particulars, I think I have the right to ask the people to give us faith and support."

WHEN CHECKS ARE RAISED

A JURY in the Supreme Court will decide shortly whether Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont must stand a loss of $4,000 because her secretary raised four checks for $1,000 each and collected the increased amounts without detection, or whether one of two banks which failed to notice that the checks had been tampered with was so negligent that the loss will fall on it.

The question arises in a suit brought by Mrs. Belmont against the Central Union Trust Company. The raised checks were drawn on the Plaza branch of the trust company and were deducted from her account with the trust company. The checks were paid originally by the Lincoln National Bank, where Mrs. Belmont also had an account for her convenience, and it was the tellers at that bank who first failed to detect the alteration. For this reason the checks did not receive the attention they might have had from the tellers of the trust company if they had been presented there for payment in the first instance. Although the answer of the trust company does not seek to put any blame on the Lincoln National Bank, it is not unlikely that if the jury decides that Mrs. Belmont was not negligent and that the trust company must pay, the trust company will then seek to hold the Lincoln liable.

For some years Mrs. Belmont had in her employ Mrs. Theida Baehr, a married woman finding it necessary to support herself because her husband was ill. Mrs. Baehr was intrusted with the duty of making deposits in the bank and cashing checks drawn by Mrs. Belmont. One of her chief duties was the preparation of the monthly payroll of Mrs. Belmont's employes. This payroll usually amounted to less than $1,000.

The papers filed in the case show that on July 1, 1918, a check, drawn for the June payroll, amounting to $973, was raised to $1,973 by the simple method of placing the figure "1" before the $973 and adding the letters "teen" to the written words, "Nine hundred and seventy-three," making the check read "Nineteen hundred and seventy-three." The second check for $973 was raised to $1,958 in the same manner and paid on July 29; the third to $1,918 and paid on Aug. 29, and the fourth to $1,872 and paid on Sept. 30.

It is the contention of Mrs. Belmont's attorneys—O'Gorman, Battle & Vandiver—that the alteration on each check was done so crudely that a cursory inspection by the paying teller would have disclosed that the letters "teen" were written so closely to the "nine" that suspicion should have been aroused. Whether this is the case is one of the questions of fact which the jury will have to decide.

Mrs. Baehr prevented the discovery of her acts for several months through the expedient of making the total of figures on the stubs of her checkbook tally with the monthly statement sent to Mrs. Belmont by the trust company, so that Mrs. Belmont could not have detected the theft except by examining each paid check and comparing it with the amount for which the check was drawn rightfully. Mrs. Baehr left her employment voluntarily before her thefts were discovered, and for other reasons, it is said, than that she feared her peculations would become known to her employer. An examination of the quarterly statement sent by the trust company to Mrs. Belmont, and including three of the raised checks, led to the belief that the account was smaller than it should have been, and an investigation was made by Mrs. Belmont's personal attorney, Addison A. Van Tine. The thefts were run down at once, and later the fourth check turned up.

Mrs. Baehr was traced to Roselle, N. J., and was extradited to New York for trial. She pleaded guilty, and her appearance in court elicited so much sympathy that the late Judge James T. Malone, before whom the trial was called in General Sessions, accepted Mrs. Belmont's plea that sentence be suspended. It was made known to the court that the circumstances under which Mrs. Baehr was led to her first dishonest act were such that she probably would never be guilty of such an act again. It was also felt that Mrs. Belmont probably would not have caused her former secretary's arrest in the first place, but would have forgiven her act if she had thrown herself on her employer's mercy and confessed her dishonesty before quitting her employment.

The complaint in Mrs. Belmont's suit alleges that the payment of the raised checks amounted to a misapplication of Mrs. Belmont's funds, for which the trust company was responsible, through the payment of the additional $1,000 "upon a check purporting to have been made by the plaintiff, but which was a forgery and was not made by her or by her authority."

The answer of the trust company sets up various defenses for the purpose of shifting the burden of negligence to the depositor. One defense is that when Mrs. Baehr was in Mrs. Belmont's employ "it was part of her duty in performing services for the plaintiff to fill out in her own handwriting the amounts, dates and names of payees of the checks signed or to be signed by the plaintiff and drawn on the account of the plaintiff with the defendant." The answer alleges further that it was the duty of Mrs. Belmont's present secretary, who succeeded Mrs. Baehr, to fill out checks in the same manner as did Mrs. Baehr. It is alleged that both women delivered Mrs. Belmont's passbook to the trust company to have the amounts of the deposits and withdrawals written up, which was done on many occasions during the period covered by the thefts.

One of the important defenses is that when Mrs. Belmont accepted the canceled raised checks she "delivered an acknowledgment of their correctness, the defendant had no knowledge of the plaintiff's claim, and plaintiff negligently failed and refused to inform the defendant" until early in October, 1918, when her attorneys gave notice of the first raised check.

COOK'S

TRAVEL SERVICE

An INVITATION to the TROPICS

where you can enjoy glorious weather on board the splendidly equipped, perfectly serviced ships of the famous GREAT WHITE FLEET sailing from New York on

January 29—S. S. "CALAMARES"
March 12—S. S. "ULUA"

There will be shore parties to HAVANA—city and suburbs—and an excursion to Matanzas; SANTIAGO, with visits to El Caney, San Juan Hill and the famous Peace Tree; JAMAICA, with auto drives across the Island amidst magnificent scenery; PANAMA, with an opportunity to view the Canal and its great locks; COSTA RICA, where on board a train en route to San Jose you pass through the wildest, most beautifully luxuriant jungles—later returning to New York after a five thousand mile cruise with your health recuperated by twenty-three days of sunshine and pleasure.

SOUTH AMERICA—Splendidly arranged tours of 90 days, visiting Rio de Janeiro, the wonder city; Buenos Ayres, the metropolis of South America; Valparaiso, the chief seaport of the Western Coast; La Paz Cuzco, with its ruins of the Incas; Lima, the Peruvian capital, and many other places of absorbing interest. Our parties are purposely small and select. Applications should be made at once. Sailings January 26, February 26.

EGYPT AND THE NILE—Our Nile steamers recommenced service on January 11. They will run throughout the season to the First and Second Cataracts.

MEDITERRANEAN—The Riviera—Italy (Easter in Rome), Spain, Tangiers, Algiers, Tunis, etc. Select Tours with Escort, visiting some of the most enchanting and interesting regions of the Old World. Frequent departures.

CALIFORNIA—Tours starting from New York on January 27 and later. Planned to cover the "Golden West"—GRAND CANYON, APACHE TRAIL and the "AMERICAN RIVIERA" of Pacific Coast resorts. These tours may be extended for another twenty days by a visit to HONOLULU.

JAPAN—CHINA—PHILIPPINES—Wonderfully attractive itineraries, including the best of Japan and China at most favorable season of the year. (Japan in cherry blossom time.) Departures from the Pacific Coast February 3, March 5, 16, 19 and April 2.

FLORIDA—CUBA—Frequent departures. Individual or escorted travel.

BERMUDA—Sailings twice weekly for this island of recuperation and beautiful scenery.

EUROPE—Escorted and individual travel. Let us help you formulate your plans for your visit to Europe this year.

GERMANY IN FRENCH EYES

Attitude on Reparations and Future Menace Reflected by an American Woman

Below is a letter written to Charles H. Grasty, foreign correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES, by Mrs. Helen Mackay, one of the most prominent Americans in France, and author of the two widely read war books, "A Journal of Small Things" and "Chill Hours."

I KEEP thinking of what you said: "Nobody cares about these things any more." And that seems to me terrible. What will happen if America does not care? How can we not care when these things mean life or death to Europe, to the Old World we have venerated and studied and loved, the trampling out of beauty, the breaking off of story—our own life and death, too?

You had written in your article, "If the Republicans are to live up to their tradition of enlightenment and moral ideas, let them immediately extend some kind of encouragement before the peoples of Europe yield to those perversities that follow in the train of suffering and despair." And then you said, "What is the use of writing when nobody troubles to read?"

The Republicans saved our Union when civil war was breaking it in two. Now Europe is going to pieces. They always saw our concern in what happens in Europe. Don't they see now? "Those perversities." Don't they know? Don't they imagine? "Some kind of encouragement." At least assurance of their looking, listening, of their keeping the balance. There is no equilibrium left in Europe. There is no great power left in Europe able to establish equilibrium. Only America can throw her weight into the balance—can she not?—before everything crumbles away.

What I mean has nothing to do with the League of Nations—that will be beautiful to think of, if ever, out of the nightmare confusion of things to be done first, the world can "get round to it."

There are things any one knows, without special knowledge of politics, just by living with a people. And one of the things you know, living in France, is that France quite understood the Senate's refusal to ratify the League of Nations. Many people of the party here we owe most to, the military party, contend that the covenant of the League of Nations had been better left out of the treaty of peace. When your neighbor wrecks and kills all about you and leaves you wounded and starving and without shelter, there are things to be done before you sit down to work out future laws regarding future neighbors. Especially by Article X. the covenant of the League of Nations would have loaded France, as the most military of the Allies, with responsibilities she does not want now. What has done her two years of wrong is that all the discussion has taken attention away from the first part of the treaty, the things that should first have been done.

Of course, living in France, it is of France I think first. England is of our own people; how can we forget that? This is the worst hour of all her time for her; how can we misunderstand her as we seem to?

But it was France who stood up in her place until the rest of us, we at the end of it, got there. Are we forgetting what would have poured through if France had not stood there? What, even stopped there, Germany has done to the world? That in the fields before Verdun lie nine hundred thousand dead?

Of course, a coalition, especially a coalition as vast as that of the Allies in the great war, cannot be expected to outlive the conditions that created it. So many different people cannot go on keeping the same interest, the same viewpoint. To England, to Italy, to every one of the Allies, each her own problem. The many little new States—with one thing in common, all of them, that they have no defendable frontiers—take each one her own way, uncertain and obscure. For France the two needs are, so that she may live, to be made secure from Germany's renewing menace, and, so that she may live, to be paid for the ruin Germany wrought her. These, again, are things every one knows. Has the knowledge become academic only to America, to be done nothing especial about?

Of France, here are things that must be told and told until heed is taken. I repeat them, just to be one of the voices.

A people of 60,000,000 men owe to a people of 40,000,000 men a debt it will take them more than a generation to pay. The nation of 60,000,000 men is left with her full political power, her central state, her unity. Disarmed she is not, cannot be kept disarmed. Where the treaty of peace was hard with her, though justly hard, she has a grievance that will deepen. Where the treaty of peace was soft with her—in leaving her her unity—she retains the source of all power. What guarantees, what precautions, are not needed for the people of a third less than her number, in whose incalculable practically unending debt she is?

When Lloyd George and Wilson and Clemenceau signed the pact of guarantee, that day at Versailles, to compensate France for the refusal of her Rhine frontier, their promise of military aid in case of future aggression by Germany on the feeble frontier left her—the 1815 frontière d'invasion—was a promise not only vital to her but vital immediately.

Not only in the north and east, but throughout her whole land, France needs that assurance to give her a sense of security in her everyday life. She goes on striving to build up again her prosperity, but with the knowledge that Germany is preparing, under cover of the thick darkness of all the world's hatreds, to come again one day with numbers and threaten her possession of the soil. Fear then is not morbid, it is the counsel of common sense.

France has bitter need of the confidence she would have been given by the pact of guarantee. But the Senate refused to ratify Wilson's signature, and Lloyd George declares that his promise depended on America's promise.

Germany is disarmed, yet she has war material to send to the Red armies, officers for the Red armies, men to fight in the Red armies. Now she is pouring men and ammunition and aviation material into Lithuania. A Germano-Bolshevik offensive—does not America know what that would mean? And how surely it is gathering among the hatreds! Stop Germany from making war material in one place and she will make it in another and hide it in farm and castle. She remains herself; in herself neither the war nor the peace has changed her. And the peace has left her more reasons than ever for doing as she has done before. France must keep up an armed peace, and go on bearing the enormous burden of militarism, conscription taking her young men from the work of building up her ruins. The shadow of Germany is always upon her. German boys are growing up with hatred in their blood and bones. Not hatred so much of France as of England and America, her rivals, as France never was her rival, nor could be. To get to England and America France must be passed. She must go down, as she stands in the way. France stood in the way in 1914. How can any one, anywhere, live and not suffer because of what that standing in her place cost France?

There is no itemizing the account of France against Germany. Numberless little things, like lives, go to make up the whole that is greater than any telling of it. I do not even mean lives that were given, I mean lives that have got to be gone on with. That they may go on they have got to be made secure, and made to feel secure, and they have got to have back the means of living that were destroyed or stolen from them.

Of what Germany destroyed or stole she replaces and gives back a little and says it is enough, that she needs the rest.

Germany pleads that she is poor, but are not her people less taxed than the people of France and England? Is it not true that she is placing gold by millions of marks in neutral countries under neutral names? That one reads on the front page of her every morning paper of new companies she is floating with the capital of so many millions of marks? Must not she have gold for the propaganda she spreads? At Geneva she gets her points in well with the little nations, and plays off the big nations one against another. Does not that game cost in gold? There is the wealth of her forests and quarries and mines. Why should she not give of that wealth, as a woman with beautiful hair cuts it and sells it, when it is all she has left for paying debts? Every lump of German coal belongs to France, and every twig of every tree. Every article her energy produces Germany owes to France, up only to the limit of possible injury to her capacity to produce. The way of the Commission of Reparation, that was plain at first, is become hard to see. But is not that only a reason the more why the country standing up, not nerve-wracked, a little removed, should use all her vision? From her distance she can see the whole as nobody can in the midst of it. One wants to shout to her, "America, Republican Party that is America, look and see what the right is. Judge, and acknowledge, and uphold. Help Europe get rid of her hatreds, and of the suffering that causes the hatreds."

All the hatreds of the world are meeting together. Hatreds of races, and hatreds of classes, and hatreds of individuals. Round and round in circles little blind men are fighting little blind men. Round and round in circles mad people are dancing. And behind all that there is the great Red hatred. Those who never in the world had enough, whose hatred was beaten down always, demand too much now, and their hatred is growing to be the greatest thing in the world. Old, old hatreds are made new, and new hatreds hark back to hatreds of antique times. All the hatreds come from suffering, and from them infinite suffering will come.

Once hatred stops, everything that is wrong will turn right.

Round and round, in circles, Folly, Fury, on a background of destruction.

Only America, a little apart, with no reason yet for not being sane, a great power still—is she not going to care? And to help? With her youth, generous, faith still left to it; with her strength, almost untried; with some ideal she has kept above, beyond hatred—is she not going to help? HELEN MACKAY.

MONTENEGRIN CHARGES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Of late certain Canadian papers have published articles in which they accuse the Serbian Army in Montenegro of having committed atrocities of all kinds on the population and other erroneous statements. This is all part of a propaganda against the union of Montenegro to Serbia which is being carried on by partisans of ex-King Nicolas of Montenegro.

In this connection I have received from our legation in London an extract of the Parliamentary debates, House of Commons, Tuesday, Dec. 14, 1920, Vol. 136, No. 150, Official Report, copy of which is attached herewith.

I shall greatly appreciate it if you will kindly publish it in your valued paper.

Captain A. V. SEFEROVITCH,
Consul, Kingdom the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes.
Montreal, Jan. 17, 1921.

(Enclosure).

Mr. Adamson asked the Prime Minister whether his attention had been drawn to the alleged crimes committed by Serbian troops in Montenegro; whether his attention has also been drawn to the assassination of Dr. Sekule Drlievich, a leading Montenegrin jurist; whether the report of Count de Salis is not being published for the reason that persons who gave evidence might suffer seriously; if so, whether the circumstances in which these witnesses could be persecuted are such as to enable the Montenegrins to vote freely and without fear on questions of self-determination, and whether the allied Governments are prepared to accede to the demand of the Montenegrin Government that an International Commission should be set up to investigate the crimes committed by the Serbians, and that Serbia and Montenegro should be equally represented on the commission?

Mr. Harmsworth, Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs: His Majesty's Government have received from the partisans of ex-King Nicolas repeated reports as to alleged atrocities.

On investigation these allegations have proved to be grossly exaggerated. As regards, in particular, the reported murder of Dr. Drlievich, I can state that this gentleman is alive and well. It is true that I stated that among the several reasons for our not publishing the de Salis report was the fear that its publication might act to the detriment of certain persons who gave evidence, but it does not appear that the Montenegrins voted otherwise than freely at the recent elections for the Constituent Assembly. We have received information that before the election all political offenders in Montenegro were amnestied, and that out of an electorate of 37,000 more than 27,000 voted, which tends to show, I think, that intimidation was not exercised on the electors. The answer to the last part of the question is in the negative.

MORE MOTOR ROAD TRAVEL

Greater Auto Touring to South Said to Be Due to Higher Railroad Fares

By A. G. BATCHELDER,
A. A. A. Executive Chairman.

BETWEEN New York City and Jacksonville, Fla., there has never been so much of road travel, starting early in the Fall and extending well into December, which signaled the closing months of last year. While a partial explanation is a substantial increase in the number of motor vehicles to be found upon the highways, another reason is due to higher railroad fares. Of the many inquiries which came to the New York City headquarters was one from a man in Vermont who desired information for a party which consisted of thirteen persons, distributed in two cars, and the frank admission was made that the interstate journey was being undertaken in order to avoid the revised railroad rates. True it was that the trip could not be made as comfortably as by rail, but there were compensating features in the healthful outdoor life, keen appetites and welcome beds at night.

While road travel is a by-product of highway improvement, at the same time it has become an asset to be reckoned with by States as well as by communities. While the National Government has been giving aid to the several States, the method followed has not worked out in such manner as to guarantee real reads across the counties. This discrepancy has been more apparent in Southern than in Northern States. Not long ago a communication was sent to the A. A. A. Good Roads Board in which a well-known Southern good-roads advocate made this confession:

"Our different States are not functioning as they should with respect to our interstate and transcontinental highways, which failure is about to convert many to a national system. I realize more and more the necessity for the building and maintenance of several lines across the continent to meet the demands of the overland travel. We are routing through this office several thousand tourists a year, which convinces me more conclusively that our State officials are not in position to meet their requirements."

Present-day motor vehicle travel is not always viewed from the same angle. One enthusiast from the province of New Brunswick, Canada, thus outlined to the A. A. A. what he considered a very successful tour:

"Leaving Fredericton, with a complete camping outfit and trailer, we entered the United States at Houlton, Me., then cut across to Albany and Buffalo, joining the Lincoln Highway at Ligonier, Pa., following this well-marked highway to Salt Lake, where we had to make a long detour through the north of Nevada on account of a cloudburst washing away part of the road. We made San Francisco in thirty-two days, stopping off four days on the way over, with only a half day of rain on the entire trip across.

"Stopping at San Francisco a few days, we turned south on California's splendid concrete highway to Los Angeles. Then we returned north to Vancouver, B. C., visiting Crater Lake and taking in the wonderful Columbia River Highway, then back to Seattle through Spokane to Yellowstone Park, where we spent three days. We arrived home in Fredericton via New York ninety-eight days from the time we started, our speedometer showing we had made 12,500 miles on the trip, using 1,001 gallons of gasoline, imperial measure. Needless to say, every one of the party is anxious to take the trip again."

And now for the other side of the story, and this from a motorist who lives in a big Western city.

"You will excuse me from renewing membership in the A. A. A. In my effort to make an automobile trip last Spring across the continent, via the South, I found your information consistently misleading and inaccurate and your maps erroneous. Perhaps, to some people, such ruts may be deemed roads, for my part, I have sold my machine, and shall not try motoring again until my fate lands me in a country where roads are passable. I have traveled in Asia, in South America, and in the Balkans. I can truthfully say that the Southern highways are worse than the lanes in those countries. To mark on a map such trails as automobile roads is either crass ignorance of what a road consists of or a deliberate attempt to mislead the public by bluffing."

If all motorists followed the attitude of this dissatisfied trayeler it would be many a year before the highways of the country were brought up to the high standard of France and Great Britain, but luckily such is not the case, for it is the motorist who has to do and will continue his concern with the right kind of road progress. Naturally, he wants to go about, but his interest in the matter has to do with the general subject of transportation, for he is as much of a citizen as are his fellow-Americans, paying the same taxes and subjected to the same laws. The more men and women go from State to State, the more they learn of their own country and have impressed upon them the plain fact that a systematic program is the only one which should be adopted: interstate roads, a Federal undertaking; intercounty market roads, an obligation of the State, and, finally, the county relieved of the most expensive roads, assuming its logical burden in the essential tributaries which lead to the farms back on the hills.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is quite evident that during the coming Winter there is going to be a long period of unemployment. Many industries have closed down entirely or are working part time. It is possible that during the severest part of the Winter, namely, January and February, the unemployment will reach its greatest height. The following plan, if properly worked out, might go very far toward relieving much of the suffering that will undoubtedly prevail in the next few weeks.

It has been estimated by those who have made a study of the subject that in times of depression between 10 and 15 per cent. of those who work are unemployed. This means that about 85 per cent. are still employed. Why could not the workers who are employed create from their wages a sum to be loaned to those who are unemployed? Briefly, the plan would be as follows:

Through the agency of the Federal Reserve Bank designating all other banks as agents those who are employed could deposit weekly a sum equal to 5 per cent. of their wages. Of course, it is not meant that 5 per cent. should be the limit of the amount deposited. Some may desire to deposit more than 5 per cent. of their earnings and others less. They would receive a card (prepared for this purpose) on which would be entered the sums deposited, the same as in a passbook for a savings bank. Those who are out of work could apply to the bank in their neighborhood for a loan. Applicants, of course, must present proper credentials from their former employers, certifying to the length of their service and the wages received. Such credentials could be supplemented by further evidence showing that the applicant is not now employed, and such evidence could no doubt be issued by a central employment agency established for the purpose. It might also be advisable to have a statement from the present landlord, certifying that the applicant is living at the address stated and is entitled to consideration.

Such evidence properly presented would entitle the applicant to receive, as a loan, approximately 50 per cent. of the wage formerly earned. It might be advisable to make loans only for a period that would carry the applicant over two weeks, requiring him to reapply for an additional loan if necessary. All money would be advanced in the form of a loan, to be repaid with interest during a period of one or two years or sooner, depending on the financial condition of the borrower. When the money is repaid to the banks by those who borrowed it, it could be repaid to those who advanced it, with interest, pro rata.

Such additional details and safeguards as may be required could be worked out by the banks. The main idea in this plan, however, is that those employed regularly should contribute a small portion of their earnings to help those who are less fortunate. The burden would not be heavy on any one and a great deal of distress would be relieved. It is quite possible that a very large percentage of all the money borrowed will eventually be repaid.

MEXICO CITY AUTO SHOW.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that an automobile show will be held in Mexico City in March, and the committee in charge states that every automobile manufacturer of prominence having distributing agencies in Mexico will be represented.

It Isn't Temperament

that makes the great artists prefer the Victrola above all other reproducing instruments, even to the extent of refusing to perform for any but Victor records. Nor is it temperament that prompts people to come from all over town to buy from us.

In both cases it's just good sense. Artists know that only on a Victor record, played on a Victrola, can their work be reproduced in its original perfection. And the people who buy Victrolas from us do it because we have a full line of the latest models, we don't try to sell them any other machine, and we give them the prompt, agreeable service that goes with every Rooney

Garment Centre Realty Co. Secures Second Loan of $3,500,000 on 7th Av. Buildings.

OTHER LOANS PLACED

Resale of Chambers St. Building for $140,000 — Important Madison Av. Deal Involving $165,000.

By far the largest and most important mortgage loan placed in the Times Square section for many months past was announced yesterday by the Garment Centre Realty Company, which has obtained $3,500,000 from the Columbia Trust Company on the two new sky-scrapers in course of construction on Seventh Avenue between Thirty-sixth and Thirty-eighth Streets. The two big structures are to house the needle industry heretofore located in and adjacent to the retail shopping district.

The southerly building is twenty-four stories, fronting 99.9 feet on the avenue, 170.9 feet on Thirty-sixth Street and 225 feet on Thirty-seventh Street, surrounding the York Hotel.

The other building is seventeen stories, fronting 74.8 feet on Seventh Avenue, 275 feet on Thirty-seventh Street and 116.8 feet on Thirty-eighth Street, being separated from the Hotel Navarre by a single parcel on each side. The mortgage is due Oct. 1, 1926. There is a prior lien of $1,275,500 on the properties.

The Home Savings Bank of Albany made a loan of $115,000 to the Arthur W. Tams Music Library, Inc., on the property at 318 and 320 West Forty-sixth Street, 44 by 100.5. It is at 6 per cent., due in 1931.

The Fifty-four Wall Street Corporation, representing J. & W. Seligman & Co., has borrowed $800,000 from the Central Union Trust Company on the nine-story structure the bankers recently purchased from the trust company at 54 Wall Street, 50 by 117.

M. M. Hayward & Co. placed a first mortgage of $58,500 at 6 per cent. for five years on the property at 254 West Ninety-eighth Street. The same brokers also placed a $22,000 mortgage at 6 per cent. for five years on the property at 260 West Ninety-ninth Street.

$140,000 Chambers Street Resale.

The Charles F. Noyes Company resold for about $140,000, for Max Marx, the five-story and basement building 99 Chambers Street, northeast corner of Church Street, on a lot 25 by 100, to Delancey P. Harris, President of the D. P. Harris Hardware Manufacturing Company, now located at 24 Murray Street. The Harris Company will occupy the building, which is in the heart of the hardware district.

Henry Holt Residence Sold.

An important deal in the Madison Avenue business section just above Fifty-ninth Street has been closed through the firm of Harris, Vought & Co. in the sale of the large five-story residence on the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Sixty-third Street to the Verde Realty Corporation.

The property was sold for the publisher, Henry Holt, and it has been held at $165,000. The lot is 20.5 by 100 feet. In the transaction the buyers were represented by Samuel H. Stone. The new owners are having plans prepared to alter the dwelling into a professional building.

The Claridge Sold for $350,000.

The seven-story elevator apartment house, on plot 75 by 100.5, at 228 and 230 West Fiftieth Street, known as the Claridge, has been bought by the Goldley Corporation (L. C. Goldman and A. Levy) at a reported price of $325,000. The property is situated diagonally opposite the Capitol Theatre and is owned by the Claridge Apartment Company, James L. Graf, President. James J. Crowe negotiated the transaction.

Brooklyn Realty Activity.

The two-story residence at 135 Metropolitan Avenue on plot 25 by 78 has been purchased by Joseph Marsico from Lawrence Hughes. The broker was James B. Fisher, and he also sold a dwelling at 53 Hinckley Place, 65 by 100, for the estate of Otto Lembert to Edward O'Dea, and the building at 272-276 Metropolitan Avenue, 45 by 100, for the Parcels Holding Corporation.

The Martin Company sold for Samuel H. Shank to Fanny Fiala the four-story dwelling at 74 Columbia Heights and the four-story factory building in the rear, 79 Furman Street; also for Fanny Fiala to Samuel H. Shank a plot on the east side of East Fifteenth Street, 112 feet north of Avenue L.

Charles Partridge sold the two-story dwelling at 962 Brooklyn Avenue, near Church Avenue, for Samuel and Abraham Goldinger.

The Henry L. Nielsen Offices have sold dwellings at 408 Sixth Avenue for Bernard and Mary Egan; at 120 Seeley Street for Gustav Oberg, and 183 Bergen Street for Emma Halligan.

Westchester Buyers.

Mrs. Caroline P. Thompson has sold her estate near the Bedford Road, Chappaqua, to a client of George Howe. The property consists of a Colonial house with five acres of land. It was held at $30,000.

The Scarsdale Estates, Robert E. Farley President, has sold a plot in the Greenacres section of Scarsdale to F. J. Hinners.

Buys Ossining Estate.

F. J. Grace has purchased the property, containing five acres, on Albany Post Road at Ossining, known as the Gilbert House place. Mr. Grace plans to improve the property as a private park and erect several cottages. W. H. Oliver was the broker in the sale.

$35,000 Bronxville Sale.

Robert K. MacLea sold for the Brookside Homes, Inc., a new Colonial brick residence and garage located on a large plot at the corner of Kimball Avenue and Allerton Street, Bronxville, to William R. Vanderhoof of the Standard Oil Company, for his own occupancy. The property was held at $35,000.

SPECULATIVE BUILDING DEAD

Only One Application for Apartment House Loan Received by Title Co.

C. H. Kelsey, President of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, in his annual report to stockholders and trustees says:

"The company's net profits for the year were $1,893,647 after deducting all Federal and State taxes, liberal profit sharing to officers and employes and losses on securities sold; $1,400,000 was paid in cash dividends and $493,847 added to undistributed profits; $1,000,000 was transferred from undivided profits to capital and distributed as a stock divdend of 20 per cent.

"Every department of the company shows increased earnings, but losses in the sale of securities and the increased expense of doing business made the net profits of 1920 $92,656 less than 1919.

"The year 1920 started out to be a better year than 1919 but business diminished as the year progressed. The number of recorded deeds was greater this year than last in Manhattan, Bronx and Queens, but fewer in other counties.

"The boom held out longer in the former counties than it did in the others. As a result, we have examined about 1,000 more titles in Manhattan and Bronx this year than last, but there has been a falling off of about 25 per cent. in Kings.

"It may be of interest to know that since the war ended we have received in our New York office but one application for a building loan for an apartment house. We made this loan and the house was built.

"We have received innumerable requests for money to build garages and buildings for business purposes, but the builders seem very wary of going into housing construction. The reasons are not far to seek.

"First it was the high cost of labor and material. A building erected under present prices will not be able to compete with one built five years from now if expected cost reductions take place. The initial cost would be too high. However, this first cost is not all. Even after the prices of material and labor showed some signs of decreasing, builders did not build residence structures. The reason was apparent. The Legislature began to take a hand at determining what income an owner could receive from such an investment. The owner could not charge what his premises were worth. He must charge what some Magistrate decided they were worth. The laws bearing on this subject passed last January were not considered sufficiently stringent and others were passed at a special session of the Legislature. No builder knows what laws will be passed at the next session of the Legislature and he is naturally timid about investing his capital in housing under such circumstances.

"If the high cost of labor and materials were taken care of and if the law of supply and demand were allowed to settle rents, the builders would probably be anxious to build apartment houses. Then would come the question of whether money could be found in sufficient quantities.

"The necessary money for furnishing housing for New York cannot be supplied except from the great body of investors who are today driven by the high surtaxes to investment in non-taxable securities. No city funds, no funds available from savings banks alone or financial institutions can ever meet the requirements.

"The money must come from the great body of citizens, men who can invest from ten to one hundred thousand dollars each in mortgages. If our income tax laws are revised so that such people can put their money into mortgages, then we will have money for housing in Greater New York and we will not have it in any other way."

Zone Law Hearings.

The Board of Appeals will hold a public hearing under the provisions of the building zone resolution, Tuesday morning, Jan. 25, at 10 o'clock, in Room 919, Municipal Building, on the following matters:

Application, Nov. 24, 1920, under the building zone resolution, of Charles B. Meyers, architect, on behalf of Barnel Realty Company, owner, to permit in a business district the conversion of existing store, public market and restaurant building into a public garage; premises 5 to 9 West 115th Street, Manhattan. Laid over Dec. 23, 1920, to Jan. 25, 1921.

Application, Nov. 5, 1920, under the building zone resolution, of Charles B. Meyers, architect, on behalf of B. Sagel, owner, to permit in a business district the erection of a public garage; the premises 2,392 Old Broadway, southeast corner West 133d Street, Manhattan. Laid over Dec. 23, 1920, to Jan. 25, 1921, at request of appellant.

Application, Sept. 13, 1920, under the building zone resolution, of James McKillop, architect, on behalf of Andrew Dina, owner, to permit in a residence district the erection of a public garage; premises 1,247 to 1,253 Prospect Place, Brooklyn. Laid over Dec. 23, 1920, to Jan. 25, 1921, for opinion by Corporation Counsel.

Application, Dec. 27, 1920, under the building zone resolution, of Dunnigan & Crumley, architects, on behalf of Shaskin Realty Company, owner, to permit, partly in an unrestricted district and partly in a business district, the erection of a two-story public garage; premises 1,304 to 1,368 Inwood Avenue, 1,363 to 1,367 Maconib's Road, the Bronx.

Application, Dec. 20, 1920, under the building zone resolution, of C. Leslie Weir, applicant, on behalf of Knickerbocker Ice Company, owner, to permit, partly in a residence district and partly in a business district, the extension in height to an existing ice manufacturing plant; premises 481 to 499 West 184th Street, 2,501 to 2,511 Amsterdam Avenue, Manhattan.

Application, Dec. 22, 1920, under the building zone resolution, of Sylvester Rosenthal, applicant, on behalf of Sylvester Rosenthal and Samuel Moskowitz, owners, to permit, partly in a business district and partly in a residence district, the erection of a motion picture theatre; premises 720 to 730 Washington Avenue, Brooklyn.

Westchester Board Officers.

At the annual meeting of the Westchester County Realty Board last week the following officers were elected for 1921: George Howe, President; Robert A. Anderson, First Vice President; R. Franklin Hull, Second Vice President; Carl C. Loh, Third Vice President; Matthew Drummond, Fourth Vice President; William R. Mills, Secretary; Stephen L. Angell, Treasurer.

The annual dinner of the board will be held on March 10 at the Hotel Astor.

FAMOUS EAST SIDE HOME AREA OF CENTURY AGO RETURNING TO FAVOR FOR FINE RESIDENCES

Sutton Place and Turtle Bay Developments Recall Early Country Estates of New York's Merchant Princes—Colonel Smith's Stone House and Gracie Mansion Are Sole Survivors of Century Ago

In the history of the many changes in fashionable and apparently firmly established private home centres on Manhattan Island, none perhaps possesses more interesting features than the migration being witnessed today from the Fifth Avenue area eastward beyond Third Avenue. Within the last two or three years several blocks between Second and Third Avenues have been radically transformed into rows of residences fully as attractive as the majority of houses characteristic of the blocks west of Lexington Avenue. It has remained, however, for the new Sutton Place development, with many of its prospective residents drawn from the exclusive circles of Fifth Avenue to reveal, in an exceptional manner, the importance of the change now in progress in the choice of select residential areas.

The decision of Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt to take a house at 1 Sutton Place, being on the northeast corner of Fifty-seventh Street and Avenue A, is the most convincing object lesson yet presented of the significance of the present movement. Sutton Place was the pleasant name given more than half a century ago to the two blocks of Avenue A between Fifty-seventh and Fifty-ninth Streets. It was then a charming locality, the land being high, and as there is nothing east of Avenue A but the East River, it was in earlier days a charming home section, commanding a beautiful view of the green-clad Long Island fields. The northerly block, between Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Streets, was badly cut into several years ago in the erection of a tower forming part of the New York Steam Company's plant.

The block between Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Streets is intact with its eighteen old-fashioned homes, and this has been taken by a community of home-seekers and is being artistically developed with gardens in the rear of the houses overlooking the river. Miss Elisabeth Marbury has one of the homes in the middle of the block, and plans were filed by her architect a few days ago to remodel the house at 13 Sutton Place for her at a cost of $20,000. Last week plans were filed for remodeling the adjoining house, at 15, for Mrs. Lorillard Cammann at a cost of $15,000. The easterly Sutton Place frontage has eleven houses, and on the south side of Fifty-eighth Street are seven houses, and work on some of the latter buildings is in progress.

In addition to this Sutton Place development, a very similar work has been under way for more than a year in the Forty-eighth Street block between Second and Third Avenues, to which the name of the Turtle Bay Gardens has been given. The bend of the river in the upper Forties was familiarly known in early days as Turtle Bay, and in former generations, when the section was a suburban community, there was a pleasant bathing beach on the shore, with bathhouses for the convenience of the Summer residents. This development contains twenty-one houses. Mrs. C. H. Sorchan, who has been prominent in Newport social activities for many years, was one of the leaders in this movement. She has a house there, and among others who have fitted up the old places are Mrs. James Townsend, Winston Churchill, Schuyler Smith, Ernest Poole, Miss Chapin, head of the Chapin School for Girls; Gillet Lefferts, Edward C. Dean and George Rublee. The open space in the rear of the houses on the north side of the block has been made into an Italian court, planted with flowering plants and shrubs.

There has also been another distinct movement in Sixtieth and Sixty-first Streets, between Second and Third Avenues, where a plan very similar to that of the Turtle Bay Gardens has been adopted, and the dwelling alterations present some interesting types of comfortable private home architecture.

The residential movement easterly to the river side presents many features in common with the fashionable home development there in the early part of the last century. The chief difference is that the houses are now chosen for city homes, whereas in former days the majority were country residences. The merchant princes of old New York, and a goodly proportion of the representation of the wealth and fashion of that time, appreciated the advantages of the high land overlooking the river all the way from Turtle Bay northward to Hell Gate, where Carl Schurz Park now recalls memories of the rural charm of a century ago. The first John Jacob Astor had a commodious country home in the latter locality, and Washington Irving, who was a frequent guest at the house, has left in his letters a pleasant picture of the beauty of the country in that vicinity. The Astor property ran along Avenue A from Eighty-sixth to Eighty-ninth Street, and had an extensive waterfront. The old home was long since wiped out, and its site is covered with tenement structures.

There are, fortunately, a few evidences still remaining which illustrate the type of these long-forgotten houses. The big square wooden house in Carl Schurz Park, overlooking Hell Gate and Astoria, was the country home of Archibald Gracie, one of the city's great merchants. Taken by the city years ago for park uses, it has escaped destruction, and looks very much today as when it contributed to the social gayety of the suburban part of Manhattan Island. Opposite the Gracie house, just to the west, was the home of another merchant prince, Nathan Prime, who, from 1820 to 1840, when he died, was one of the richest men in the city. The old frame house was standing up to three or four years ago, hidden in the middle of the block bounded by First Avenue and Avenue A, Eighty-ninth and Ninetieth Streets, and was long used by the St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum. When the asylum moved out of town a few years ago the ancient place was torn down and additional tenements erected on the block.

Close by the Sutton Place home development is one of the most interesting houses ever erected in that area. It is on the north side of Sixty-first Street between First Avenue and Avenue A, and is one of the most picturesque old houses on Manhattan Island. It is a stone building of good dimensions, now considerably raised above the grade of the street. On one of the gabled wings is the date of its erection, 1799, in large brick letters. It was built by Colonel William Stephens Smith, who married Abigail Adams, the only daughter of President John Adams. Colonel Smith was a member of Washington's staff during the Revolution, and when President, Washington appointed Colonel Smith Surveyor of the Port of New York. During that time he bought a large tract facing the East River and built an expensive frame house on the south side of Sixty-first Street. The present structure, on the north side, was originally planned for the stable. Colonel Smith soon after became financially involved and his country estate was sold at foreclosure. The big wooden home was used for a while as a school, and eventually was burned.

The original stable, remodeled into a residence, became famous in the years following 1820 as one of the most popular road houses on the upper east side. It was kept for many years by William Niblo, of Niblo's Garden fame. In 1821, under the name of the Kensington House, Mr. Niblo, in advertising its merits, called it a "superb mansion, four and a half miles from the city, furnished in handsome style, and beautifully situated on the banks of the East River. Dinners and tea parties, clubs and societies can be furnished with all the delicacies of the season. Turtle clubs will find this an agreeable resort."

In 1830 the house became the property of Jeremiah Towle, for many years a city surveyor, and his family lived there until about twenty years ago. Then the Standard Gas Light Company acquired the property, and the erection of a huge gas tank cut off the narrow view of the river which had been obtained from the porch on the easterly wing. For several years it has been occupied by Italians, but recently it was taken for an antique shop, and, being an antique itself, its final years are being put to a very worthy use. Although hedged in with buildings foreign to its time and architecture, the old Stephens Smith home presents something of the charm of its historic suburban days, and should be visited by all who may be interested in seeing what Manhattan homes looked like more than a century back.

In the block to the south, just east of Avenue A, is a large and much neglected wooden structure, which, in its Colonial architecture, clearly shows that when built it was a costly residence and well adapted for hospitable entertainment. In the same block, on the Sixtieth Street side, there was up to a few years ago a very similar house, but it has been demolished and the same fate awaits the surviving mansion.

What might be termed the palmy days of the East River front were in the years from 1800 to 1850. The entire locality was an aristocratic suburb, and in the number of elegant country seats it had no rival in the city. Among the prominent families residing there were the Schermerhorns, Gracies, Primes, Pauldings, Rikers, Lawrences, Pearsalls, Beekmans, Brevoorts, Rhinelanders, Astors and Provoosts. One of the large Schermerhorn farm holdings comprised the entire tract now occupied by the buildings of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, on the easterly Avenue A frontage, between Sixty-fourth and Sixty-seventh Streets. Less than twenty years ago that tract was used by the Pastime Athletic Club, and one of the old Schermerhorn homes stood on the elevation at Sixty-fourth Street.

Many old New Yorkers still recall a part of this east side district as the site of that famous amusement resort known as Jones's Woods, but it may be news to many to know that the city at one time came very near taking over a large tract of the woods and making it into a public park. In 1851 Jones's Woods included the territory from Third Avenue to the river between Sixty-sixth and Seventy-fifth Streets. In that year the Legislature of the State authorized its purchase by the city for a public park, in addition to the Schermerhorn plot now owned by the Rockefeller interests. It comprised about 160 acres and on the land were some of the largest and finest trees on the island. The selection of Jones's Woods was actually the forerunner of the selection of the larger Central Park tract. The leaders in the park movement felt that the east side property was not large enough for the future metropolitan needs and this view led to the abandonment of Jones's Woods for a park and the purchase, largely through the instrumentality of Andrew H. Green of the present Central Park site. The old Jones family residence was near the foot of Eighty-second Street.

Richard Riker, who for thirty years, up to 1833, was the Recorder of the city, had a pleasant suburban home near the foot of Seventy-fourth Street. It was shaded by oaks and other large trees. In the Hell Gate region, close to the Astor, Prime and Gracie homes, was the country residence of the Rhinelander family. It stood at what is now the northwest corner of Avenue A and Ninety-first Street. Close by was the home of William Paulding, a nephew of John Paulding, one of the captors of Major André. In 1827 the following notice appeared in one of the city papers:

"For Sale—The pleasant situation near the sixth mile stone, adjoining the place of William Paulding, in the Village of Yorkville, containing four acres, well stocked with fruit and forest trees, stables, dairy and a spring of good drinking water. The house commands a view of Hell Gate."

Conditions were similar in all parts of this east side section, as may be seen from another early advertisement, appearing in 1831, offering to sell or lease a home in the Turtle Bay area. The house is described as "pleasantly situated on Turtle Bay, on the East River, formerly occupied by J. M. Aspinwall and lately by J. D. Brown. It contains about seven acres, with a well-built double-front house, stable and carriage, bathing and wash houses, well stocked with fruit trees, shrubbery and grapevines. For beauty of situation, improvements and retirement, united to convenience of access to the city, the place is not surpassed by any on the East River."

The improved transit facilities afforded by the opening of the Harlem Railroad led to an increased home movement toward the centre of the island and with the laying out of streets and the erection of homes for the more modest dwellers of Yorkville, the suburban homesteads gradually disappeared.

In 1835 the Harlem Railroad completed its single track on Fourth Avenue to Eighty-sixth Street and a popular two-story hostelry was built there, known for years as Nowlan's Hotel. In 1839 the double track line was opened and a grand celebration was held at the hotel. In 1845 it is recorded that good building lots in many parts of Yorkville were sold from $100 to $400 each and from that time dates the erection of many of the small two and three story frame houses of which many examples still remain in the old Yorkville Village limits. In 1854 a writer in commenting on the changes on Third Avenue said that houses and stores are almost within speaking distance all the way to the boundaries of Harlem.

PROPOSED LUMBER TERMINAL

New Company Formed to Build on the Hackensack River.

A movement for the establishment of a large lumber terminal on the east bank of the Hackensack River, at the west end of Jersey City, has been started by the organization of the Fulton Lumber Terminal Company.

Organization of the company has been effected by the election of F. J. Vanderbeck, Treasurer of G. B. Hayward & Co., as President; E. G. Thomie of Seattle, Wash., Vice President; C. W. Daughs of New York, Secretary; Albert Carpenter of New York, Treasurer, and E. R. Shaw, General Manager. The Directorate consists of P. F. Fitch, Riley Williams and R. H. Reed and the President, Vice President and Treasurer.

It was reported that the company would start with a paid-in capital of $1,000,000 and that a tract of fifty acres with a water frontage of half a mile had been leased for ninety-nine years. The plans were said to call for the construction of modern steel fireproof storage sheds with a capacity of 100,000,000 feet of lumber, with electrical handling facilities, a planing mill, a box factory and a sash and door plant.

Arrangements are reported to have been made with shipping interests to transport lumber from any point on the Pacific Coast to the proposed terminal at a flat rate of $15 per 1,000 feet, which was said to be about half the present rate.

Although a charge will be made by the terminal company for storage and handling, it was said that with this addition its rate would not equal the present cost of bringing lumber from the Pacific Coast by rail. One of the features of the project is the proposal to deliver lumber within New York City when the vehicular tunnel is completed entirely by motor truck, which service, it was said, will be in charge of B. F. Fitch, President of the Motors Terminal Company of New York and Cleveland.

INCREASED TRAFFIC.

Long Island Railroad Figures Show 115 Per Cent. in Ten Years.

In ten years' time the passenger travel of the Long Island Railroad System has more than doubled. Here are the figures from 1911 to 1920, inclusive:

	No. Passengers
1911	33,867,288
1912	37,319,812
1913	40,606,183
1914	41,634,223
1915	42,629,325
1916	45,802,722
1917	50,796,028
1918	55,004,086
1919	64,067,541
1920 (Estimated)	73,000,000

The heaviest passenger service ever performed by the Long Island in any single month was last July, when 8,511,276 people were carried, making a daily average of 274,557 riders.

As shown above, the railroad handled the greatest passenger traffic in its history in 1920, exceeding the record of the previous year by nearly 9,000,000 travelers, or 14 per cent. The movement by months was as follows:

1920.	No. Passengers
January	4,170,945
February	3,951,804
March	5,193,297
April	5,094,707
May	5,965,205
June	6,762,586
July	8,511,276
August	8,463,845
September	7,865,852
October	6,822,510
November	5,383,727
December (Estimated)	5,814,246
Total	73,000,000

ST. DENIS BUILDING.

Famous Hotel Reconstructed Into an Office Structure.

The St. Denis office building, occupying an area of 100,000 square feet, on Broadway and Eleventh Street, will be ready for occupancy on Feb. 1. The building has a frontage of 200 feet on Eleventh Street, and about 100 feet on Broadway, opposite Grace Church. The structure is the reconstructed St. Denis Hotel.

The Eleventh Street entrance, thirty feet deep, which the building contained originally, has been supplemented by an entrance seventy-five feet deep on Broadway. The ground floor will be used for stores, four on Broadway and three on Eleventh Street.

The changing of the St. Denis Hotel to an office building obliterates one of the oldest hotels in the city. The Lafayette, the Brevoort and Hotel Albert are other old landmarks. The St. Denis Hotel was the fashionable headquarters half a century ago.

Mill Cut Houses.

The economical value and practicability of "Bilt Rite" houses is being demonstrated by the Island Lumber Company, Inc., through the construction of an American Colonial design house on the southwest corner of Parsons Avenue and Oak Street, in Kissena Park West, Flushing, L. I. The houses are "mill cut to fit," but are constructed in accordance with the most approved methods and are not in any way either temporary or portable.

MADISON AVENUE LEASE.

Frederick Fox & Co. Acquire Famous Old Residence.

Recent deals affecting holdings on Madison Avenue in the vicinity of the Grand Central Terminal attest to the strong hold which high-class business is taking on the stately old residences which line the thoroughfare.

The transaction whereby Frederick Fox & Co., real estate brokers and managers, acquired the old Thompson home at 297 Madison Avenue, southeast corner of Forty-first Street, is one of the most interesting in the history of the thoroughfare since the beginning of the uptown business movement.

The property was leased last week for a long term by this real estate organization, for its own occupancy, from Mrs. Mary C. Thompson, who controls the entire front on the easterly side of the avenue from Fortieth to Forty-first Street, with the exception of 295, which is owned by the 40 East Forty-first Street Corporation, Charles M. Warner President, fee holder of the big office structure abutting.

Mrs. Thompson's holdings include 297 to 293 Madison Avenue and comprise a row of splendid private residences which are the peer of the best on the entire avenue. The Williams Club occupies the spacious building at 291 and Mrs. Thompson herself lives at 283. The Fortieth Street corner she acquired in February of last year from the Billings Estate Corporation.

The new home of Frederick Fox & Co. is a five-story structure of marble and granite. The site was acquired in 1866 by Samuel C. Thompson, son of John T. Thompson, one of the founders of the Chase National Bank. It subsequently passed into the possession of his widow, Mrs. Abby S. Thompson, and then later to his son, Ferris S. Thompson, who died in March, 1913.

The latter, it will be recalled, left about $3,000,000 to his alma mater, Princeton University, including in this bequest 1,000 shares of Chase National Bank stock. Mr. Thompson, who was in poor health for many years prior to his death, spent most of his time in Paris and saw comparatively little of the elaborate structure which he inherited from his mother.

Six months after his death the property was conveyed by the executors of his estate to Mrs. Mary C. Thompson, the present owner. It was for nine years the home of the Aero Club, which last August moved to new quarters in East Thirty-eighth Street.

The Frederick Fox organization will utilize two floors for its business.

Negotiations are well advanced for the leasing of the two upper floors to one tenant.

FEW LOW-PRICED ROOMS.

Stewart Browne Discusses Difficulties of Present Situation.

"The United States or New York City," says Stewart Browne, "will not overcome the housing shortage in twenty years unless and until it subsidizes every new family housing building to the extent of 25 per cent. or more of its cost. Exemption from municipal taxation for five years will help, but it isn't sufficient.

"Existing owners of New York City realty who are not speculative builders or promoters are more interested in legally preventing calling of mortgage loans—for lenders to obtain higher net income—than they are in legally forcing corporate mortgage lenders to make loans for new housing construction.

"Compelling financial institutions by statute to invest 100, 50, 25, 10 or 5 per cent. of their assets in housing mortgage loans will, in my opinion, not build a new building for housing, but will probably prevent the present calling of mortgage loans.

"The housing shortage at rents of $20 per month per room and under is acute and becoming more so. Eighty per cent. of New York City's population cannot afford out of their earnings to pay $20 per month per room for rent.

"Land values, cost of material, labor, taxes, mortgage interest, maintenance and operation are so high that it is impossible economically to rent such new housing at rents of $20 per month per room and under."

PRIVATE HOUSE DEALS.

Riverside Drive Residence Sold for Small Apartment Alterations.

M. H. Gaillard & Co. have sold for the Lansing Construction Company, the five-story house, 25 by 100, at 67 West 108th Street, adjoining Manhattan Avenue. The buyers will improve the property. It was held at $40,000. The same brokers also sold for Mrs. C. L. Erickson, the four-story residence at 63 Riverside Drive, 21 by 100. It will be altered into apartments when the present lease expires. It was held at $50,000.

Gustav Sandblom has sold the three-story dwelling at 164 West Thirty-fifth Street on lot 18.9 by 102. It was taken in part payment for Château-Thierry on Riverside Drive, recently purchased by Joseph S. Ward. Edward C. H. Vogler, was the broker in both transactions. The purchaser is a client of H. F. Byrnes.

Pease & Elliman sold for a client of Earle & Calhoun the four-story dwelling, 29 West Seventy-third Street, on a plot 21 by 60 by 102, held at $42,000.

The Merit Realty Corporation sold the two three-story and basement, brownstone front, private dwellings, 246 and 248 West 121st Street, on a plot 33.4 by 100.11, to George De Weerdt, who will occupy the dwellings for his own use. Joseph Horn negotiated the sale.

Against Wage Cut.

Delegates to the fifteenth annual convention of the Ohio State Association of Builders' Exchanges last week at Youngstown, Ohio, were advised in an address by F. G. Webber of New York, Secretary of the National Building Trades Employers' Association, not to reduce wages at this time.

"You are better off to allow your men the wages as they now are than put them in a disgruntled condition," Mr. Webber said. "How to get these men to do a bigger day's work is your problem."

Webber predicted an early boom in building, but feared it may find the building contractors in worse condition than at present.

More Passengers Last Year.

During the year ended June 30, 1920, the total number of passengers carried on all of the city's transportation lines was 2,364,775,067, an increase of 284,830,770 over the preceding year, or an average daily increase of about 780,000.

TEN YEARS' WORK BY QUEENS CHAMBER

Decennial Anniversary Celebrated by 1,200 Prominent Citizens.

QUEENS' BUSINESS GROWTH

Borough Only Surpassed by Twelve Other Cities in U. S. in Value of Its Manufactured Products.

The Queensboro Chamber of Commerce celebrated the tenth anniversary of its organization last week with a dinner at the Hotel Commodore, attended by over 1,200 members, citizens and public officials.

In his address of welcome H. Pushae Williams, President of the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce, gave a history of the Chamber and outlined some of its notable achievements in behalf of the development of the Borough of Queens.

He said, in part: "The Chamber was organized in April, 1911, with a membership of fifty-five business men who saw a great future for Queens Borough if proper attention were given to making its splendid advantages as a residential and industrial section known to the world. To this end they devoted themselves, and how well they have succeeded is shown by the fact that more than 800 other business men are members of the Chamber and working with them to the same end, and that Queens is surpassed by only ten other cities in the United States in the value of its manufactured products, which reached a total of more than a quarter of a billion dollars.

"During the period since the Chamber was organized, the population of Queens Borough has grown from 284,041 in 1910 to 469,042 in 1920, an increase of more than 60 per cent. The Chamber points to this fact to show the value of organized effort.

"The avowed purpose of the Chamber as set forth in its articles of incorporation was "to promote the general welfare of the Borough of Queens, City of New York, and to foster its commerce." It was the first Chamber of Commerce organized in New York City to represent a borough.

"The Chamber has had five Presidents, each of whom has served two years, as follows: William H. Williams, Robert W. Higbie, C. G. M. Thomas, George J. Ryan and H. Pushae Williams. Walter I. Willis has been Secretary since its organization. Many of the charter members still retain membership.

"In addition to the work of officers and executives of the Chamber, a dozen or more standing committees have been lending their efforts to promote and protect the interests of the Queens business men, involving the transportation of passengers and freight, waterfront development, protection of manufacturers, improvement of highways, parks, schools, sewers, water supply, housing, fire protection, &c.

"One of the main things which led to the organization of the Chamber was the lack of rapid transit facilities in Queens Borough. While rapid transit lines were being extended in other boroughs, which were rapidly growing as a result of such facilities, Queens was neglected in spite of the fact that the Borough embraces thirty-seven per cent. of the total area of New York City, with thousands of acres of undeveloped territory much closer to the business heart of the city than parts of Brooklyn and the Bronx.

"Not until 1911, when the Chamber was organized, was any recognition secured. The Queensboro Chamber of Commerce more than any other single agency may be credited with the construction and operation of five extensions into Queens with more than fifty miles of single track, carrying more than 150,000 passengers daily, and making the borough at last a real integral part of New York City. This accomplishment was due to the organized, continuous and permanent efforts of the Chamber.

"To the Chamber also should go much of the credit for the improvement of highways, which came soon after its organization. During the Summer of 1911, G. Howland Leavitt, Chairman, and members of the Highways Committee of the Chamber made a careful study of the roads in the borough and mapped out a plan of improvements needed. About this time, Borough President Connolly, who had just taken office, invited Mr. Leavitt to accept the position of Superintendent of Highways, which he did, and at once laid his plan for improvement before the Borough President. President Connolly, backed up by the Chamber of Commerce, went before the Board of Estimate and asked for an appropriation of more than $1,000,000 for repaving 110 miles of highways in the borough. The request was granted and the work was finished in 1912, giving Queens the best highways to be found in and around New York City.

"Three terminals of the State Barge Canal were also established along the waterfront in Queens through the efforts of the Chamber.

"With the aid of the Traffic and Industrial Bureaus of the Chamber, many of the troublesome problems of the manufacturing interests of the borough have been solved. Through the Publicity Bureau working with the newspapers of the city, much publicity has been given to the advantages of the borough as a place in which to live and do business. Realising the need of homes for the rapidly growing population, the Chamber also organized a Housing Bureau which has pointed out to intending builders and financial interests that Queens Borough is the logical place in which to build their homes.

"During the recent war, the Chamber of Commerce was the headquarters for many of the war activities, particularly in the Liberty Loan Red Cross and United War Work drives.

"Ever since its organization, "service" has been the keystone of the success of the Chamber of Commerce; service by individual members for one another; personal service by the officers, directors, members of committees and executives; service by all members in response to the calls of their Government throughout the war. Quality of service, rather than quantity, has counted.

"The industrial development of Queens Borough has been one of the wonders of the past decade. Beautiful factories, housing nationally known industries and costing millions of dollars, have been built, adding largely to the assessed valuation of property in the borough. Today more than 2,000 industries, with 78,000 employes, manufacturing products of every description, are located in the borough."

SUMMER RENTALS
This is the time to select the country house you wish to rent this Summer. We have a number in the various suburbs of Westchester County and Connecticut, among the hills or along the Sound, ranging from $1,000 upward for the season.

George Howe, 527 Fifth Ave. N.Y.

GOOD JUDGMENT
requires your consideration of purchasing your home before the active Spring market. It means better selection and saving in price. Profit by last year's experience. Hesitancy means disappointment. These properties are only a few of our advantageous offerings:

WHITE PLAINS
Ideal location, over half acre. Well designed home, hot water heat, oak floors, enclosed porch, three baths, large living room, open fireplace, four master bedrooms, two servants' rooms. A home of refinement at a proper price.

LARCHMONT
50% reduction if sold now. The biggest waterfront bargain we have ever offered. Six acres, twelve-room house, all improvements, large garage. One of the few good waterfronts with trees. You will buy this on an inspection.

PLEASANTVILLE
Four acres, excellent land. Twelve-room house, two baths, steam heat, electric light, large garage, fruit trees; only ten minutes to station. Price less than cost of buildings. Offered exclusively by us.

SCARSDALE
Stucco house of superior construction on large plot, convenient to station. Ten rooms, three baths; perfect condition; garage; landscaped grounds. Owner, leaving town, wants offer. We recommend this as a bargain.

PELHAM
Best residential section; on large plot, stucco home, four master rooms, two servants' rooms, three baths, hot water heat, copper leaders and screens; garage. An exceptional built home at the right price.

RYE
In the Purchase section, Colonial home on fourteen-acre plot, six master sleeping rooms, three baths, large garage and stable; cottage; poultry house. One of the few remaining desirable estates in this exclusive section.

Prices Will React
Some prices have dropped off a little during these months, but the signs point to a shortage again this Spring and they are due to rise. Great rental demand, no building for Spring occupancy. Don't wait until April or May. Now's the time to buy.

WHITE PLAINS—$23,000.
A new Colonial house of excellent construction; big living room, open fireplace, dining room, pantry, kitchen, laundry on first floor; 4 master sleeping rooms, 2 tiled baths on second floor; maid's room with bath; located in a very popular section.

SCARSDALE—$21,500.
A small modern house in an exclusive section among beautiful estates; Colonial type, with 7 rooms, nicely arranged, 2 baths, hot-water heat and other modern equipment; plot 70x106, with many splendid shade trees; rather a rare combination for this section.

LARCHMONT MANOR—$11,500.
A substantial little cottage in convenient location, 10 minutes to station, easy walk to beach, plot 50x154, 8 rooms, 1 bath, gas and electricity; newly decorated; an all-year home in this choice section at an unusual price. Act quickly, as it won't last long.

DOBBS FERRY—$20,000.
A house on the hill with impressive vista of the river, hollow tile and stucco construction, built before the war; 9 rooms, 3 baths, hot-water heat, gas and electricity; good sized plot with fine shade trees. This has just been reduced from $25,000; really an excellent value.

NEW ROCHELLE—$13,500.
In a residential park, overlooking fine large estate; plot 50x147; 8 attractive rooms, 2 baths, newly decorated, all modern improvements; a rare house at this unusual figure.

PELHAM MANOR $22,500.
A three-year-old Colonial house of exceptional quality, in fine neighborhood; 11 rooms, 2 baths, sleeping porch; hardwood floors, white trim, hot-water heat, 2-car garage with billiard room; a thoroughly equipped modern house, the price of which has been substantially reduced for quick sale.

Listen, Folks
Should you by any chance be in the market to buy a home this coming year and feel that by waiting you will be able to purchase at a lower price, you are missing the opportunity of your lifetime. We own two new houses, 9 rooms and 3 baths, on plots 100x200 in the finest residential park in Westchester.

"Wykagyl Park"

These houses are honest bargains; prices are less than actual cost to produce. There is nothing to compare with them, and we can prove it; you can prove it, too, by seeing them. We are not out to make a profit, we are not broke, we don't have to sell, but we don't want the houses, and if you do, come out to-day, NOW, bring your checkbook and snap up a real home at a sane price. There is no "nigger in the woodpile." Let us prove it. Call to-day at our New Rochelle office, North and Paine Avs. Phone 3757, or write

AN HONEST BARGAIN; 25% CUT

SUBURBAN BUILDER: Will sacrifice fine English Colonial home, of unusual charm, at less than present cost. I need cash. Have too much construction on my hands. Interior decorations are still to be put in. I will install them according to the tastes of a purchaser. The house has ten large, light rooms and two big tiled bathrooms. The plot is 100 x 158 ft., and while not on actual lake front, is opposite small park, directly on chain of beautiful lakes, affording the best of boating, bathing and fishing, the rights to which run with the land. Only 2 minutes' walk to trolley and 10 minutes' walk to railroad express station. Splendid commuting service to New York City. Beautiful residential section. 800 feet elevation. $5,500 on easy terms buys it complete, ready for occupancy, including electric fixtures, shades and large Westinghouse electric range, with unusually low electric current rate, making cost of operation less than suburban gas. $7,500 1*st mortgage* now on property can remain. Bank appraisal $15,000. My total price only $13,000. Particulars from GEO. C. BLACKWELL, Sherman Square Hotel, Broadway and 71st St., New York City. Telephone 8400 Columbus.

Business Opportunities

Advertisements offered for publication in the Business Opportunities columns of The New York Times are subject to censorship, but no responsibility is assumed by The Times for the accuracy of statements or reliability of announcements.

Prospective advertisers fill out a special form calling for three business references and an explanation of the proposition, which forms a basis for investigation.

Reputable business establishments, those who seek investment of surplus capital, businesses in need of loans and new partners with investments of capital frequently obtain what they desire through the Business Opportunities columns of The New York Times.

January 20, 1921.

The New York Times:

Last week we were particularly successful in filling our stenographic and secretarial positions through advertising in the Help Wanted columns of The New York Times. The quality of the applicants necessitated little if any elimination on our part. One day we inserted a seven-line advertisement and received nine good applicants, four of whom we placed the same day in positions paying $25 to $35.

BABCOCK EMPLOYMENT AGENCY,
507 Fifth Avenue, New York.

January 20, 1921.

The New York Times:

Our five-line Help Wanted advertisement in The New York Times for a secretarial stenographer brought seventeen replies, from which we filled two positions. We like The Times because it is the one newspaper that gets results from persons of education and refinement. It is because our Times advertising brings us such high-class replies that we have been able to place so many applicants in high-salaried positions.
